Franco Hurls 300,000 at Barcelona, 37 Miles Away

Crosses Provincial Line Despite Loyalist Diversion in South; Captures Airport

"If Franco Wins," an Editorial, Page 6, Section III.

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, France, Jan. 14.—Insurgents announced tonight they had reached the border of Barcelona Province and were only 37½ miles from the government capital in their drive for a decisive victory in the Spanish civil war.

Gen. Franco put an army of 300,000 men into action against government lines defending the capital, Barcelona.

Insurgents were said to have entered Barcelona Province on its western boundary through capture of Codom Peak in the Sierra de Queralt. This marked an advance of nearly 13 miles since morning for the northern column of the central army corps.

The column sent back word of capture of important villages and towns in quick succession throughout the day.

Loyalist Air Base Captured

Government counter-offensives in southwestern Spain and in the Brunete sector west of Madrid appeared to have failed as diversions.

Besides the occupation of Codom Peak, insurgents reported that 20 miles to the south their troops had captured the walled town of Valls, government air base 12 miles north of the port of Tarragona. Government reports denied this.

The insurgents also announced the occupation of Hospitalet, on the Mediterranean coast 24 miles north of Tortosa and 16 miles southwest of Tarragona.

Insurgent reports said seven army corps taking part in the big push in northeastern Spain had speeded up operations over a 100-mile front extending from the Pyrenees Mountains, east of Andorra, near the French border, southward through Lerida and Tarragona provinces to the Mediterranean.

At Barcelona the government was reported pressing both men and women into defense.

Orderly Withdrawal

All Spanish citizens, between 17 and 55, including women, were drafted into the military reserves. A government decree authorized the defense ministry to use the new reserves in any service.

The government, which said its forces had effected an orderly withdrawal without suffering heavy losses, reported it was entrenching for a strong stand in the Tarragona sector. The civilian population of this principal port of southern Catalonia was said to have left, excepting only able-bodied men who could strengthen the fortifications.

A second insurgent force converged on Tarragona from the south on the coastal road in a spectacular push from the Sierra de Balaguer. This column, insurgent headquarters announced, captured the village of Montroig, within 3 miles of the Mediterranean coast.

This maneuver, by forces operating east of Falset, enabled the in-

American Sent To Jail for 4 More Months by Nazis

Hamburg, Germany, Jan. 14 (AP).—George Joseph Roth, naturalized American, was sentenced today to spend four and a half months more in a Nazi prison as the result of his conviction on charges of "preparation for treason."

Roth, former steward on the United States liner Washington, was arrested November 29, accused of possessing a Communistic newspaper, printed in the German language, in Le Havre, France.

At his trial today Roth testified he did not know the paper had Communistic tendencies.

Masaryk Blames Nazis For Palestine Terror

JAN MASARYK

Urges Jews to Save Holy Land From Fate of Czechs

The fight to make Palestine the Jewish national homeland must be carried on with greater zeal than ever before if the Holy Land is not to share the fate of Czecho-Slovakia, Jan Masaryk said last night at the opening of the National Conference on Palestine.

Bitterly assailing the Munich pact, the son of the founder of the post-war republic intimated that present-day terrorism in Palestine, involving Arabs and Jews, is inspired and financed by the Nazis. Meanwhile, 15 Arabs paced outside the meeting place, the Mayflower's Italian Garden.

Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, of Cleveland, national chairman of the United Palestine Appeal, warned against the "ransom" scheme whereby Germany would permit emigration of her Jews if their brethren elsewhere would become salesmen for Nazi-made goods.

Paraguay Refuses To Admit Refugees; 300 'Not Farmers'

By the Associated Press.

Montevideo, Uruguay, Jan. 14.—Three hundred refugee Jews from Germany and Italy, on their way to make homes in Paraguay, found themselves suddenly stranded in Montevideo today as the Paraguayan government canceled their visas.

Uruguayan authorities were troubled further with disclosure that 200 more Jewish refugees would arrive Monday in a similar plight. President Alfredo Baldomir called a special cabinet meeting for Monday to study the problem.

The 300 here now apparently are all persons of means. They traveled first class on the Italian liner Conte Grande and took up temporary abode in the capital's finest hotels—under police surveillance.

The 200 due Monday, however, are all third class passengers of the smaller French vessel Lipari, and their problem may become more acute.

The refugees, equipped with visas granted by Paraguayan consular

U. S. on Alert For Spies as Fleet Gathers

Japanese, Nazi Agents Hunted; Pacific Force Moves to Caribbean

By the United Press.

Havana, Cuba, Jan. 14.—United States Secret Service agents, it was reported tonight, had arrived at the Caimanera Naval Station to investigate activities of alleged Japanese and German spies in connection with the coming visit of the fleet to the Guantanamo naval base.

Transit Completed

Cristobal, C. Z., Jan. 14 (U.P.).—The Pacific squadron of the United States battle fleet rode through the Panama Canal today into the Caribbean to join the Atlantic squadron in the greatest mass naval maneuvers in American history.

The last of 80 fighting units—battleships, cruisers, airplane carriers, destroyers and mine sweepers—started the 45-mile transit of the isthmus shortly before noon, bringing together more than 160 surface vessels of the Navy.

Defend "Navy's Life Line"

Hundreds of airplanes and submarines also were concentrated at Caribbean bases. The maneuvers will seek to test American defense of the Navy's life line—the Panama Canal—and the entire southern American coast against a hypothetical continental enemy.

All commercial traffic was suspended and wartime precautions were in force throughout the zone.

United Firm Won't Bow to Plane Embargo

U. S. Names Builders Not Co-operating in Hull Agreement

By the United Press.

The State Department last night named the United Aircraft Corporation, East Hartford, Conn., as the sole United States aircraft manufacturer which has declined to adhere to Secretary of State Hull's informal embargo on sale of American planes and parts to nations which bomb civilian populations.

The fact that one United States manufacturer refused to accede to this policy was revealed several days ago by the National Munitions Control Board. The manufacturer was not named at that time.

Citation of United Aircraft was made in the monthly report of the board on arms export shipments and licenses. The report revealed a license was issued to United Aircraft last month for shipment of 600 propeller blade forgings to Japan at a price of $102,000.

Hull's effort to discourage such shipments was instituted last June. He said the policy was being adopted to emphasize American condemnation of the practice of bombing civilian populations.

Yesterday's munitions reports showed issuance of licenses for $3,131,767 in arms in December and actual arms shipments of $5,368,027 in the month.

Largest license went to France for $1,462,533, mostly military air-

Doctor, Reliving Movie Scene, Saves Dying Triplet, Delivers 2

Chicago, Jan. 14 (U.P.).—Dr. W. E. Block remembered a scene from a motion picture today, and that is why, when Sigmond Fronczak asked the immemorial question of anguished fathers, he was able to reply:

"The baby? It's two girls and a boy."

Today Mrs. Fronczak awakened her elevator operator husband.

"Get the car ready," she said.

Fronczak hurried to the garage and tried to start the car. Soon Edward Sliwka, Fronczak's brother-in-law, shouted from the doorway:

"The baby, it's come."

Fronczak called Dr. Block. When the doctor arrived the little body was cold, apparently dead.

"Then a scene from 'The Citadel' came to me," Dr. Block said later. "In much such circumstances a young physician saved a baby by dipping it in hot and then in cold water, spanking it and breathing into its mouth."

He doused and spanked the 4-pound child back to life and turned his attention to the mother. Mrs. Fronczak had given birth to two more babies.

Tonight Fronczak tip-toed to the incubator and gazed at the triplets—his fourth, fifth and sixth children. Then he went out and bought three cigars for his boss.

"I'll have to hit him for a raise," he said. "I've got three more mouths to feed—on $25 a week." (Picture, Page 8.)

'Croppers Threatened With Troops

Retreat to Homes Too Slow, Police Say; Road Camps Emptied As 'Health Menace'

By the Associated Press.

New Madrid, Mo., Jan. 14.—Southeast Missouri's bedraggled army of road-camping sharecroppers and their families gave way slowly and reluctantly today before the efforts of State highway patrolmen to end their protest against a low economic status.

Acting on orders of Dr. Harry Parker, State health commissioner, who said the situation constituted "a menace to public health," the patrol began breaking up the crude camps that have dotted 150 miles of highways in the "bootheel" cotton country since Tuesday.

The sharecroppers, mostly colored, demonstrated against what they termed "practical eviction" from their former farm homes. They declared the landowners for whom they worked on shares had changed their status to that of "day laborers" in order to avoid sharing Government farm subsidies.

The 1,300 men, women and children, who had endured inclement weather, lack of food and miserable living conditions in their makeshift highway hovels, complied reluctantly with the officers' command to "get packing in a hurry."

With the patrol not having the success it anticipated in carrying out Dr. Parker's orders, J. V. Conran, prosecuting attorney of New Madrid County, commented:

"If they (the share-croppers) don't get off the highways, it may be necessary for us to request Gov. Stark to call out the State militia to remove them."

Sheriff A. S. Stanley conferred at Sikeston tonight with Capt. A. D. Sheppard of the State patrol on what procedure to follow.

Move Demonstrators to Homes

By nightfall only 3 of the 13 groups had been disbanded, and it appeared the job of ending the demonstration would take another day or two.

Police planned to work through the night moving the demonstrators to their former homes, if possible; otherwise to temporary camps.

At Memphis, H. L. Mitchell, secretary of the Southern Tenant Farmers Union, said he had been informed the Missouri police had escorted J. R. Butler, president of the C. I. O. affiliate, and two organizers to the State line and had told them "to get out and stay out."

Earlier, Capt. Sheppard said Butler had conferred with him at Sikeston and had promised full co-operation in moving the sharecroppers back to their homes. He said Butler then left, presumably for Memphis.

"Probably Have to Use Force"

In St. Louis, Owen H. Whitfield, colored minister and tenant on the Government rehabilitation project at La Forge, Mo., declared the police "probably will have to use force" before they can clear the highways. Whitfield had urged the mass demonstration.

Told the camps were ordered broken up as "a menace to public health," Whitfield said:

"Do you think those shacks my people have been living in are any healthier? If they are sent back to the conditions from which they

Meningitis Kills 15 in Outbreak Among Navajos

Salt Lake City, Jan. 14 (AP).—An outbreak of meningitis in the Navajo Indian reservation has taken 15 lives in three weeks, the Utah Board of Health announced today.

The board warned all travelers to avoid the reservation, which extends into Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico and Utah.

The Navajo central agency at Window Rock, Ariz., denying a widespread epidemic, said two deaths were all that so far have been directly attributed to the disease.

The Government Indian hospital at Ship Rock, N. Mex., reported six deaths.

Md. Wife-Slayer Convicted, Gets Life Sentence

Towson, Md., Jan. 14 (AP).—A jury late today convicted John Henry Tillman, 33, of murdering his 19-year-old wife, but three circuit judges saved him from hanging because of "your mental condition."

Tillman was sentenced to prison for life. He admitted on the stand that he killed his wife because of jealousy, and the jury ruled that he was sane at the time of the slaying and is sane now. They deliberated an hour and 15 minutes.

Law Violation Charged by Relief Report

Assistance Division Also Accused of Coloring Data; 'Chiseling' Alleged

Deliberate violation of the law, negligence, inaccuracy, questionable judgment, violation of proper procedure, and coloring of reports in dealing with chiselers were charged against the public assistance division of the Public Welfare Department in the latest section of Burdette G. Lewis' investigation into District relief, released early today.

The section, part of the full report made to the District sub-committees of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, covers 30 cases of allegedly fraudulent character.

Informed of the charges, Elwood Street, director of public welfare, declared:

"We have asked time and again for the names in order that we could start cleaning the rolls if they really need it. We asked when the report was started eight months ago that instances of fraud be reported to us. It would have saved the taxpayers some money if our requests had been granted."

Penalty Provision Urged

"To correct partially the chaotic situation," Lewis' special investigator, Jay T. McCoy, urged:

Addition to the general assistance law, of a clause providing penalty for fraud;

Revision of the various application forms because "present forms are incomplete and inadequate when considering safeguards for the issuance of public funds . . ."

Establishment of a complaint bureau in the Public Welfare Department, under direction of the corporation counsel, to handle all fraudulent cases.

McCoy asserted that he discovered many forms of irregularities during review of cases, in which misrepresentation and possible fraud were indicated, but which had not been discovered or acted upon by the case-working staff.

Recommends Quick Review

"The situation is serious enough to warrant a strong recommendation . . . that the entire case load be reviewed as quickly as possible in order to inaugurate corrective action," he report said.

Pointing out that responsibility for the investigation and reporting of relief chiselers and frauds has been placed upon the case workers and case supervisors, the report charged "it has been fully demonstrated that they are not qualified by training or experience for investigations of this nature and the proper reporting of these matters to their superiors."

"As caseworkers are responsible for an average of 150 cases per worker," McCoy asserted, "it is apparent that intensive and necessary investigation of fraudulent cases is but a remote possibility."

The report accused case-workers of not reporting or obtaining all the facts, failure to go into the complete history of the case, failure to verify facts of other income and resources of clients, and coloring reports in favor of clients. Supervisors are charged with accepting the workers' reports without proper checking, and both are charged with omitting from their surveys infor-

Philadelphia Fails to Pay Its 20,000 Employes

Philadelphia, Jan. 14 (AP).—The army of 20,000 men and women who run the Nation's third largest city worked for nothing today because of a budget tie-up.

It was the first pay-day of the new year, but neither the mayor, policemen, nor street sweepers received salary checks. Furthermore, they probably will draw another blank next pay day, January 30. Some of them may lose their jobs or receive salary cuts.

Meanwhile city councilmen pondered how to slash $18,000,000 from the 1939 budget and avoid a staggering deficit. The council will meet January 23.

Pedestrian Struck, Seriously Hurt By Hit-Run Car

Willis Grist, 51, of 3031 Douglas street northeast, was injured seriously by a hit-run driver yesterday in the 1500 block H street northeast.

At Casualty Hospital he was said to have a fractured arm and leg and possible internal injuries. Police broadcast a lookout for an automobile bearing Maryland tags which struck Grist while he was walking from a street car loading zone to the sidewalk.

District Tax Plan Assailed On 2 Fronts

Surplus Denounced By Rufus S. Lusk; Sales Levy Fought

By James D. Secrest.

The proposed District tax program was attacked on two fronts yesterday as fiscal experts put the plan in final shape for submission to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, and Congress tomorrow.

Rufus S. Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers Association, assailed the program, which has been indorsed by the Citizens Advisory Committee, on the ground that it will create a surplus in the District general revenue fund.

Rep. Schulte Assails Sales Tax

Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, struck at the suggested 2 per cent retail tax because, he said, it will fall hardest upon families on relief.

Meanwhile, a reduction in the present temporary real estate rate of $1.75 appeared likely should the entire program be adopted, to offset surplus revenue in the Treasury to the credit of the District government.

While the maximum return from the 4-point tax plan is estimated at $12,000,000, experts pointed out that the Commissioners may be empowered to fix the realty rate at any point between $1.50 and $1.75 to supplement the return from the income-sales tax, the corporation levy, and the 4 per cent utility tax.

Suggests $1.55 Realty Rate

Lusk, denouncing any move to raise more money than necessary to balance the 1940 budget, suggested that the realty rate might drop as low as $1.55.

The revenue difference between $1.50 and $1.75 on present assessments is a little in excess of $3,000,000. This would be the range the Commissioners might exercise in preventing a surplus.

"The reported plan of the tax advisory committee to recommend the setting up of a surplus in District funds for the fiscal year 1940," said Lusk, "is not only unsound but also contrary to the substantive law of the District.

Fears Encouragement to Waste

"Such a proposal means," he added: "(1) Taking money from the taxpayers when there is no immediate need for it; (2) providing an argument for reduction of the Federal contribution; (3) encouraging wasteful and unnecessary expenditures, and (4) repealing the act of 1927 which seeks to prevent the creation of a surplus."

The size of the surplus is a matter of guesswork at this time, District officials pointed out, because it is

Storing Excess Cotton Urged For Defense

Senators to Study Plans for Disposal Of Record Surplus

Plans for setting up an "emergency reserve" of cotton for use in event of war will be studied by Congress at an early date, both as a defense measure and as a means of reducing the record-breaking surplus of 14,000,000 bales now held by the Government, it was learned last night.

Removal of up to 6,000,000 bales to warehouses to be built by Federal funds will be considered, along with the suggestion that finished cotton goods for emergency use by the Red Cross also be stored.

Senators from the cotton-growing States will meet Tuesday morning to seek some "working conclusion" in regard to surplus disposal, which they consider "the Nation's most serious farm problem."

Recommendations that from "one to six" million bales be processed into goods and given outright to the Nation's relief clients also will be considered.

Bankhead Urges Subsidy

A committee of manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers of cotton goods in a report to the Department of Agriculture yesterday advocated that the 1934 surplus (1,666,404 bales) be turned over to the Surplus Commodities Corporation and that the agency be authorized to arrange for manufacture of mattresses "by regularly established private enterprises."

Senator Bankhead (Democrat), of Alabama, asserted yesterday he would like to see the surplus reduced by sale of 4,000,000 bales, proceeds to be given to farmers in proportion to reductions they would voluntarily make below quotas set by the present farm program.

Bilbo Would "Freeze" Supply

"The present program, barring unusual weather," said Bankhead, "looks toward a crop of around 12,000,000 bales this year. My idea is that a farmer who could grow 12 bales under that program and is willing to grow but 8 bales could then be given the money from four bales held and sold by the Government. No doubt, the reduction would take place and the surplus could be taken up in little more than two years."

Senator Bilbo (Democrat), of Mississippi, said he would push for a plan to "freeze" between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000 bales by storing them in Government-built warehouses. Most of the other bales he would "make up and give to relief clients."

Senator Smith (Democrat), of South Carolina, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, announced that his proposed farm plan will not be presented to Congress until after the cotton meeting.

John Nolen, Jr., to Replace Cammerer as A.D.A. Planner

Arno B. Cammerer, executive officer of the Park and Planning Commission, is to be replaced on the District Alley Dwelling Authority by John Nolen, jr., director of planning for the commission, John Ihlder, executive officer for the authority, indicated yesterday.

He said the "many out-of-town duties" of Cammerer made it impossible "for him to attend to the Alley Dwelling affairs."

The official order from the White House has not been received by Ihlder but the director of the ADA said it would probably arrive this week.

Cammerer was appointed to the authority by President Roosevelt in October, 1934. Besides his duties with the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Alley Dwelling Authority, Cammerer is a member of the Washington-Lincoln Memorial Gettysburg Boulevard Commission; District Zoning Commission; director, National Park Service, and the Federal Fire Council.

Ihlder pointed out the executive officer of the Planning Commission was an ex-officio member and that the executive order from the White House would change the designation to replace this membership on the ADA to that of Director of Planning of the Planning Commission.

The ADA executive officer said Cammerer, as director of the National Park Service, was required to make many trips throughout the country.

Committee Asks New Department For WPA, PWA

Senators Urge Permanent Works Agency Merging Emergency Units

Creation of a new Federal department to include the WPA and PWA under a single head was projected as part of a sweeping revision of the American relief system recommended yesterday by the special Senate Committee on Unemployment and Relief.

Three proposals in the report, forbidding WPA administrative employes to take part in politics and aiming at "absolute independence of political action" for persons on work-relief, will be submitted to the Senate tomorrow in an effort to attach them to the WPA deficiency bill passed Friday by the House. Attempts to give effect to the other recommendations probably will await the 1940 appropriation bill.

The special committee, headed by Senator Byrnes, South Carolina Democrat, would provide for distribution of Federal relief funds according to a formula based on the total and the unemployed population of each State. Instead of contributing variable amounts to the cost of relief projects, localities would be required to pay 33 1-3 per cent.

District Would Lose

It was stated that local governments now pay an average of 22 per cent of WPA projects and 55 per cent of PWA projects.

The committee report, signed by Senators Byrnes, Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, Frazier (Republican), of North Dakota, and, with reservations, Murray (Democrat), of Montana, also suggested that the 33 1-3 per cent payment be "proportionately reduced" in States where the average per capita income is less than the average per capita income in the United States as a whole.

In an expression of "minority views," Senator Lodge, Massachusetts Republican, maintained that among the areas "which would stand to lose" would be Maryland and the District of Columbia, as well as most of the Eastern industrial States.

Other Proposals

Other proposals by the committee included consolidation of employment agencies (possibly under the Social Security Board), increased Federal contributions for the aged, the blind, and for dependent children, and increased unemployment benefits as well as simplification of the benefit system.

Benefit payments under the contributory old-age pension system should be advanced from 1942 to

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Next to inducing Hitler, Stalin and Mussolini to accept professorships of history at different universities, the one thing that would most eliminate the menace of war would be the invention of a device to disable airplanes in flight by wireless.

Kettering
. . . plane ray?

If the United States could announce that it had such an invention tucked away, Hitler could quit building long range bombers.

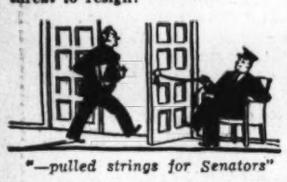
* * * *

There must be quite a few inventors wrinkling their brows occasionally in the pursuit of such a device. If I were a Rockfeller or a Ford I'd endow Inventor Kettering and a large staff to devote all his time to this.

And I, for one, would be willing to relinquish all hope for television in my time in favor of a super-flit for war planes.

* * * *

GILT OFF THE DOME: All three of Roosevelt's top New Year appointees—Hopkins, Frankfurter and Murphy—wore patched pants when they were kids and never took an ice-cream cone for granted . . . The betting is about even that Roosevelt will have two more Supreme Court vacancies to fill, with a third one as a long shot; thus leaving 5 or 6 Roosevelt justices on the bench. What a pleasant surprise the right-wing Democrats would get if he were to choose a conservative like John W. Davis (the 1924 Presidential candidate) as one of them . . . But Davis is an Easterner, and will be 66 in April. . . . Even some liberals feel there should always be a staunch conservative or two on the Court . . . By the way, when will Justice McReynolds carry out his threat to resign?



"—pulled strings for Senators"

In one respect at least the U. S. Senators are more democratic than the Senators of the State of Iowa—the U. S. Senators open the doors of the Senate for themselves as they go in and out.

Out in Iowa's Legislature there was a doorkeeper whose job it was to manipulate the swinging doors whenever he saw a Hawkeye statesman approaching.

* * * *

But the Iowa door-opener got a little weary of his arduous duties, and finally arranged a contraption to make them easier. He attached a rope to the door, sat himself down in a chair where he had a good view of the fun in the State Senate, and merely yanked the rope whenever a Senator was going in or out.

Is it fair for U. S. Senators to exhaust themselves opening doors when such a simple device would save their energies for the Republic?

I ate lunch the other day with Gen. Malin Craig, Chief of Staff of the Army, and Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations, the top officers of the two services (there were quite a few others there, too). Both of them were in civvies, and to the innocent bystander they looked like a couple of college deans or professors.

* * * *

Not only these two ranking officers, but all of the several hundred Army and Navy officers on duty in the Capital wear civvies to work every day of the year except one, when they put on their uniforms. To official functions they wear their uniforms. But you see fewer uniforms on the streets of Washington than in any large capital in the world.

"—super-flit for war planes"

When Congressman Mel Maas, of Minnesota, suggested that the Navy ought to have a General Staff, like the Army, one or two admirals felt it might be inappropriate to call it the "General Staff" . . . Somebody suggested the "Admiral Staff," which of course has a different connotation.

* * * *

"Why not just call it the 'admiralty,' as they do in England?" said somebody else. But in England "admiralty" means the whole navy department, not the admirals alone; and the First Lord of the Admiralty is not necessarily an admiral.

OF THEE I SING: Of the Marine Band, which played "Franklin D. Roosevelt Jones" at a White House reception for the judiciary last week . . . None of the Justices recognized the tune . . . School Board Urged to Plan Youths' Careers

University Women Back Plea for Vocational Program

A guidance program to begin in kindergarten and continue until boys and girls are fitted into jobs was asked of the Board of Education yesterday by the Guidance and Personnel Association, backed by the Washington Chapter of the American Association of University Women.

Presented by Dr. Mitchell Dreese, professor of educational psychology at George Washington University, and based on a ten-year study, the program plan asked:

That new teachers be selected with "a view of promoting guidance" and making possible a system in which each teacher would be a working part.

Appointment of trained counselors for each secondary high school, selections to come from the ranks of present teachers already interested in guidance.

That an administrative officer, or officers, be designated in order that occupational and guidance material could be collected and disseminated from a central set-up.

Recalls D. C. Surveys

"I understand such an office is being considered," Dr. Dreese declared. "A gold mine of occupational information has been uncovered in recent District of Columbia surveys. It should be made available to all students."

Dr. Homer Rainey, director of the American Youth Commission, recently appointed president of the University of Texas, praised work of the local groups in formulating the guidance program and stressed national youth needs.

A Nation-wide system for collection, interpretation, and dissemination of occupational information is needed, particularly for rural sections, he declared.

Placement services, also operating on a national basis, should be set up to "bridge the gap between school and job," Dr. Rainey declared. This service, he maintained, should then be strengthened by a follow-up system, which would provide guidance until the boy or girl has a permanent job. "Such a service is needed between the ages of 17 and 25 years," he said.

Ballou Reported Favorable

Dr. Chester Holmes, assistant superintendent of schools, told association members Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent, is studying a copy of their report and is favorably disposed toward it. "I think you will get some of the things you ask right away," he said.

Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education, said she would ask Ballou to combine guidance with the curriculum revision program now being made in the District schools.

One of the duties of the centralized office proposed by the guidance report would be development of accumulative records for each student in school.

Frankfurter Held Criticized on All Things but Fitness

Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 14 (AP).—The current issue of the Harvard alumni bulletin declares criticism of Prof. Felix Frankfurter, recently named to the Supreme Court, has been directed at everything "except his fitness for the office to which he has been appointed."

The bulletin asserts Frankfurter could not be called a radical if to be one is to be "an advocate of novelty for its own sake, or of panaceas, or of revolutionary violence," and added:

"Judging by such tests, he is a traditionalist."

Senate Relief Committee Asks Consolidation Of PWA and WPA Into Single Agency

Byrnes

1940, the committee said, repeating a recommendation made last year.

The "politics-in-relief" prohibitions which will be introduced in legislative form tomorrow by Senator Hatch are designed as a supplement to proposals already broached by the Sheppard committee on Senatorial campaign expenditures.

Hatch would make it a felony for any person to offer work-relief or other benefits in return for political support, and also for anyone to threaten to take benefits away from relief recipients because of political activity.

Political Ban

Echoing the "Hatch amendment" that last year failed of passage in the Senate by one vote, a third proposal to be introduced tomorrow would forbid WPA administrative employes from actively participating in political campaigns. All three provisions strike at practices said to have been widely employed in the 1938 general election.

The works program, designed "for the unemployed not covered by unemployment compensation or whose unemployment benefits are exhausted," should be in the hands of a department of public works, the report advised. Unification is desirable to end the "competition" between WPA and PWA and to coordinate the program, it declared.

Both CCC and NYA should also be placed under the public works department, the report said, "in view of the fact that the youth in both agencies are either engaged in public work or receiving training designed to prepare them for private employment."

President to Fill Post

The department head—Senator Byrnes told reporters that it was immaterial to him whether the unified agencies were placed in a new department or in a single bureau—would be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, but the bulk of the personnel would be under the merit system.

The proposal that localities be required to pay one-third the cost of work-relief projects in each State was tempered by a provision that the percentage should apply to the entire group of projects, not to each project individually.

Byrnes pointed out yesterday that PWA entered into the unification plans insofar as PWA projects extend into the fiscal year 1940. The one-third contribution would apply only to WPA unless Congress prolongs the life of PWA, all of whose projects, under present law, must be completed by July, 1940.

The section of the report urging the Federal Government to revise its present method of giving public assistance to the aged, blind and dependent children, would step up the Federal contribution from $260,000,000 a year to $325,000,000.

Contributions Matched

Under present law, the Federal Government matches State contributions to the aged and blind, and gives one-third of State contributions to dependent children—but with the proviso that the Federal outlay be no greater than $15 a month for the aged and blind and $18 for children. Thus, "there is no guarantee of a minimum payment" to the recipient, the report points out. In Arkansas, for instance, monthly aid to the aged is only $4.22.

The committee recommends that the Government match State contributions in all three categories, except that it pay even more than half the total in those States with a per capita income less than the national average. Furthermore, the committee would impose minimum total monthly grants of $15 and $20.

Merit System Urged

A condition of Federal grants for public assistance should be State administration of relief "by personnel chosen on a merit system satisfactory to the Social Security Board," the report said.

Unemployment compensation, which was termed "the first line of defense" for the workers included within the system, is designed "only to meet temporary unemployment," the report asserts. Deploring payments too slow and too small to be of any use, the committee proposes that the waiting period before payments begin be reduced to one week, that the period of benefits be lengthened "and the amount of benefits be fixed at a few standard figures."

The report offered a "suggested schedule of weekly payments for unemployment compensation," running from $5 for persons earning less than $15 a week to $15 for those earning more than $30. Under the proposal, workers would have to be employed 26 weeks in the previous 12 months to be eligible for benefits. Compensation would last 13 weeks.

The committee proposed to amend the present law so States would receive Federal funds to cover administrative costs only if employes were selected under a merit system and if unemployed workers were paid "at least the minimum benefits established by the Federal act."

With the assertion that "the officials administering unemployment insurance in practically every State believe the U. S. Employment Service should be transferred to the Social Security Board," the committee recommends "a complete reorganization and unification of all agencies" dealing with unemployment problems.

"There should be one office," the report says, "where the worker can register in order to qualify for his unmployment compensation and where, at the same time, he can talk with the officials charged with the duty of assisting in securing employment for him."

State's Rights Dispute May Go to Congress

Sen. Austin to Sponsor Bill to Restore Flood Control Sovereignty

By the Associated Press.

The State's rights stand taken by Vermont's Governor, George D. Aiken, in behalf of a tiny backwoods hamlet (Union Village, Vt., population, 50), threatened last night to precipitate a Congressional fight over revamping the Government's $388,500,000 flood-control program.

Senator Austin (Republican), of Vermont, said he would introduce tomorrow a bill to "restore to the States the rights they exercised before the flood-control act of 1938 was passed."

That act gave the Government powers to condemn lands for flood control without consent of the States.

O'Mahoney, Burke Fought It

There were indications, too, that Democrats might support Austin's demand for amendment of the act. It was recalled that last session Senators O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, and Burke (Democrat), Nebraska, opposed the condemnation provision, contending it violated State rights.

Hub of the controversy is the question whether the Government can take enough land at Union Village to construct a $2,000,000 flood control dam and reservoir on the Ompompanoosuc River.

With regard to that question alone, the White House said President Roosevelt was ready to drop the $2,000,000 project rather than contest the right to Federal acquisition of the land.

That statement brought immediate replies from Governor Aiken and Senator Gibson (Republican), Vermont, and Representative Ball (Republican), Connecticut, here.

"Unbelievable," Says Ball

Aiken, who got his Legislature to vote him a "war chest" of $67,500 to fight "seizure" of State lands, hailed it as proof the President "is unwilling to risk a court decision on the 1938 flood control act."

Ball said he could "hardly believe the statement credited to the President."

"The damages to public and private property has been appalling and the failure of the Government to proceed with flood control measures in New England will mean untold suffering to thousands of people," he said.

Gibson said the President was "attempting to place blame for the delay, in the public's opinion, on Vermont."

Other New England Governors have indorsed Aiken's stand.

Saltonstall Sees New Faith in G.O.P.

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—Leverett Saltonstall, new Republican Governor of Massachusetts, today said the November election had demonstrated the Nation's "renewed confidence" that the "Republican label is a guarantee of a liberal, progressive type of government, rather than a government of reaction."

Saltonstall, Senator Wiley, of Wisconsin, and Representative Mundt, of South Dakota, spoke at the 18th annual luncheon of the Women's National Republican Club. Wiley and Mundt also are new Republican officeholders.

Duce Promises Chamberlain To Aid Refugees

Briton Starts Home, Satisfied of Italy's 'Good Faith, Good Will'

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Jan. 14.—British Prime Minister Chamberlain left Rome today satisfied Premier Mussolini would co-operate in settling the problem of what to do with Germany's and Italy's Jewish refugees.

Italians expressed belief the way had been opened—by British dealing with Italy as an imperial equal—to a new deal in the Mediterranean, where she has claims on France.

Both Mussolini and Chamberlain expressed "determination" to follow policies aimed at maintenance of peace.

Those three points emerged as a result of the three days Chamberlain devoted to the Rome leg of the appeasment travels he started during the September crisis over Germany's quarrel with Czecho-Slovakia.

Methods Unannounced

Promised Italian co-operation on the Jewish problem stood as the most concrete achievement of the British-Italian talks, but Chamberlain gained no idea as to what lines Mussolini's co-operation in the matter would follow.

Before his departure Chamberlain, in a statement to the Italian press, said he was "more than ever convinced of the good faith and good will of the Italian government" and that the visit would further "European collaboration."

He said he had not come for specific accords, but "to obtain through personal contacts more intimate understanding of the points of view of the two countries.

"That object has been fully realized."

Italy's Policy Outlined

Virginio Gayda, Il Giornale D'Italia editor who usually writes with authority, gave an outline of Italy's future policy which may have been that which Mussolini laid before Chamberlain.

The Fascist editor wrote:

Italy intends to withdraw her remaining troops from Spain when foreign militiamen are withdrawn from the "Red (government) side." She is waiting for the London nonintervention committee to settle the problem. But the attitude of France and Soviet Russia runs contrary to such settlement.

A new deal is necessary between Italy and France. France's "threats and obstinate intransigeance" can only aggravate the risks and dangers for France rather than dispose of the disputes.

Italy is in "perfect agreement" with Germany to bring eastern Europe and the Balkans under the influence of the Rome-Berlin axis.

Italy's policy toward Japan's course in China is "no mystery." Italy and Japan, along with Germany, are allied in the anti-Comintern Pact."

Italians Scout French Area

Djibouti, French Somaliland, Jan. 14 (AP).—An Italian airplane was reported today to have flown deep over French Somaliland territory, apparently scouting the area into which French troop reinforcements moved this week.

Reports reaching this seaport town from the interior said the plane yesterday flew over the strategic Dekil Mountain district, about 50 miles from the Ethiopian frontier.

Tunisia Expels Italians

Tunis, Tunisia, Jan. 14 (AP).—A large number of Italians whose identification papers were found to be irregular were expelled today by authorities of this French North African protectorate.

The Italians were placed aboard ships bound for Italy and sent across the frontier into neighboring Italian Libya.

Refugees crossing from Lbya into Tunisia reported Italian authorities had decreed fines of 500 lire ($26.30) for all Libyan Arabs discovered listening to French radio broadcasts from Tunisia and a month's imprisonment for second offenses.

Berlin Hopeful

Berlin, Jan. 14 (U.P.).—The British-Italian conversations were described in a semi-official pronouncement here today as "not unsatisfactory."

The decision to apply in the near future agreements already drawn up indicated that English and Italian relationships are in the process of development toward positive results," the statement said.

Brazilian Foreign Minister To Visit U. S. for Trade Talks

Dr. Aranha Invited To Discuss German Commercial Gains

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt has invited Dr. Oswaldo Aranha, Brazilian foreign minister, to come to Washington next month as the Government's guest to discuss "various questions of great importance" to the two countries.

This was disclosed yesterday by State Department officials who indicated conversations would center on trade expansion and exchange difficulties which have restricted United States exports to Brazil where Germany has centered her intense trade drive in Latin America.

President Roosevelt's invitation was extended to President Vargas January 9 and accepted yesterday. Aranha will arrive February 9.

"There have arisen during the recent months various questions of great importance in which our two governments are equally interested," Mr. Roosevelt said in his telegram to the President of Brazil.

"It would be particularly gratifying if these matters could be discussed in direct conversations between high officials of our respective governments in that frank and friendly manner and in that spirit of mutual helpfulness which fortunately are traditional in the relations between Brazil and the United States."

Vargas accepted the invitation on behalf of Aranha, who served for several years as Ambassador to Washington.

Germany's economic penetration in Latin America has been particularly impressive in Brazil where Germany shoved the United States into second place in 1938 in sales, although this country still is Brazil's best customer.

In connection with Aranha's visit, it was recalled the Treasury Department recently announced it was investigating possibilities of lending money in Latin America to stimulate American trade.

Dr. Aranha will be the second Brazilian foreign minister to come here as the guest of the Government. Dr. Laro Miller made a similar trip in the summer of 1914.

National defense problems also may enter into the forthcoming conversations. The United States has loaned Brazil naval and military missions and is considering lending agricultural experts and advisers.

Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, said questions to be taken up at the meetings, which may last a week or ten days, include foreign exchange difficulties and ways and means by which the reciprocal trade agreement can be implemented.

Although yesterday's announcement mentioned only the Brazilian Minister's visit, it was believed similar conversations may be undertaken with other countries in the near future.

Col. Fulgencio Batista, Cuban chief of staff, visited Washington last November as an official guest.

Farley Honors Roosevelt

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt yesterday accepted the honorary presidency of the Third Pan-American Highway Congress, which opened Thursday at Santiago, Chile.

He cabled Francisco Mardones, president of the congress, his "profound appreciation of the honor so generously conferred upon me."

300 Refugees Denied Entry By Paraguay

Refugees

officials abroad, did not learn until yesterday that the Paraguayan government had suddenly cancelled all immigration permits issued since the end of November.

Economics Minister Jose Bozzano said in Asuncion that all Jewish immigrants must have entrance visas issued by the national land colonization bureau, and this bureau said in turn that the refugees stranded here, not being farmers, would not be allowed to enter Paraguay.

Ship Line Argues

The Italmar Navigation Co., operators of the liner Conte Grande, made representations to the Paraguayan government at Asuncion, arguing that the Italian government would not permit the refugees to return to Genoa, where most of the visas were granted.

Although some of the Jews were from Italy, most were from Germany. The 200 due Monday sailed from Hamburg and were believed to be mostly Germans.

A high Uruguayan government official said the refugees "in the last analysis must be allowed to remain in Uruguay if no other solution is found."

"Law of Inertia"

"The law of inertia," he said, "must prevail if other laws fail."

A dispatch from Paris said the Paraguayan diplomatic staff there was awaiting instructions from Asuncion regarding an alleged traffic in false passports for Jewish refugees seeking to go to South America.

In Asuncion the Paraguayan Department of Immigration ordered deportation of eight Jews who had arrived with visas granted in Paris, Berlin and Marseille. Officials said the visas were granted "incorrectly."

Nazi Spies Hunted as U.S. Fleet Masses

Fleet

The combined fleet was expected to be divided into defense and attacking forces under the general supervision of Admiral Claude C. Bloch, commander in chief of the American naval forces. Admiral Bloch was aboard the flagship Pennsylvania.

The fleet problem will be conducted in February. March and April will be devoted to exercises and in May the combined fleet will head for New York for the Worlds Fair.

At the conclusion of the transit, Admiral Bloch issued the following statement:

"The transit of the fleet was completed early this evening. It was conceived and executed as an ordinary routine undertaking. It transpired without incident. A total of 80 men o' war were transited smoothly, efficiently and rapidly due to the splendid organization and efficiency of Panama Canal organizations."

Australian Bush Fires Rages; 60 Die

Melbourne, Australia, Jan. 14 (AP). Disastrous bush fires roared today through the heat-parched state of Victoria, leaving an estimated 60 deaths, hundreds homeless and property damage running into millions of dollars.

Fires blazed in more than half of Victoria's 88,000 square miles of territory. The state was in the grip of the worst drought in its history.

Planes Sink 2 Warships, China Claims

20 Aircraft Batteries Also Reported Destroyed

By the United Press.

Shanghai, Jan. 14.—Chinese advices today reported a rejuvenated air force, said to include Soviet as well as American and British volunteers, had inflicted terrific damage on Japanese warships and airplanes in South China.

Claiming the first major Chinese triumphs in recent phases of the war with Japan, the Chinese messages asserted that:

Two Japanese warships were sunk off the Bocca Tigris forts in the Canton River.

Japanese batteries at Kongmoon, south of Canton, were demolished.

Twenty Japanese airplanes were set afire near the Bocca Tigris forts.

Another score of Japanese planes were engaged in a dog fight and some of them were shot down.

Claims Discounted

The advices did not report Chinese casualties. Japanese officials discounted or denied the Chinese claims.

Chinese said a total of 34 Chinese planes took part in the raids, 14 of them attacking the Kongmoon batteries and two bombarding the Japanese warships. Although Chinese had made several attempts to strike back at the Japanese in the Canton area they had been repulsed in land fighting.

Earlier this week, dispatches from Chungking asserted Russian, British, American, Australian and New Zealand fliers had joined the rejuvenated air force. About 500 new planes, including some Bellancas, were reported to have been imported by way of Indo-China.

High Chinese officials, however, denied any new Bellancas had been purchased.

Pacification Claimed

[Meanwhile a Japanese army spokesman reported the "pacification" of the Hangchow area, after 360 battles and skirmishes in a year, the Associated Press said.

[Hangchow, capital of Chekiang Province, lies about 100 miles southwest of Shanghai. The Japanese captured it on Christmas Eve, 1937, and Chinese a week ago launched a surprise offensive, designed to recapture the city.

[The Japanese said Chinese regulars now had been routed and guerrillas had been dispersed.—Editor's note.]

The United States consulate at Hankow announced it was investigating removal by Japanese military officials of a consular notice from the offices of the duPont Company forbidding entry. Such notices are placed by consular officials on American property.

The duPont office notice was replaced by a Japanese military notice saying: "Nothing can be moved in or out of these premises without permission of the Japanese military."

Nanking Plans Conscription

Shanghai (Sunday), Jan. 15 (AP). Japanese newspapers here reported today the Japanese-dominated Nanking reformed government soon would undertake conscription to force Chinese between the ages of 17 and 30 into its military service for seven years.

It was understood the Nanking government expected to conscript 1,500,000 Chinese this year in Japanese-occupied territory surrounding the former capital of China, to oppose Chinese guerrillas operating throughout the reformed government's domain.

Kenedy Accepts Invitation to Loyalist Spain

Writes De los Rios He'll Make Inspection Of Status of Church

Louis Kenedy, of New York, chairman of the Keep the Spanish Embargo Committee, yesterday advised Dr. Fernando de los Rios, Spanish Ambassador, he would accept his invitation to visit Loyalist Spain.

In his letter of acceptance Kenedy said that, while he could not speak for other committee members, he was "happy that at long last there would seem to be some hope that an opportunity will be afforded for impartial observation of the condition of religion in Loyalist Spain."

"For myself," he continued, ". . . I shall be very happy to . . . avail myself of the opportunity of examining the condition of religion at the present time in that part of Spain controlled by your government. I may add that I have had opportunity of making inquiries of a few other members of the committee and can assure your excellency that at least several of them would be glad to accept a like formal invitation if extended to them."

Kenedy explained the purpose of his committee was to oppose "the wide and intensive propaganda which would lead our country into partisanship in a foreign conflict."

Edward J. Heffron, secretary of the committee, last night issued a statement in which he said a delegation of observers, protected by the loyalist government, should be able to "know the truth of the matter" by entering loyalist territory.

"When a government has demonstrated its hatred of religion," he explained, "it must make more than a token offer before its assurance of friendship for religion can seriously be entertained. The burden of proof in such a case is obviously on the government that is trying to explain away its former misdeeds and to establish its case by unsupported allegations."

Army Flier Killed In Cuban Air Meet

Havana, Jan. 14 (AP).—Capt. Manuel Orta, Cuban army aviator, was killed today in a crash at the municipal air carnival in which 38 American fliers were participating.

Officials in charge immediately canceled tomorrow's concluding events of the three-day meet.

Orta represented the Cuba army at the All-American air meet in Miami last week.

Kerensky and Father Walsh Will Chat Here on 1917 Russia

Georgetown Educator Will Entertain Pre-Soviet Revolutionist Thursday; Munich Peace to Be One of Topics

Surrounded by a library of 3,000 volumes, mostly on the Russian Revolution, Alexander Kerensky will chat philosophically with the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., vice president of Georgetown University, when he is entertained here in the historian's study on Thursday.

Russia's first and only liberal president, Kerensky will lecture in Constitution Hall that night on the revolution and on where the post-Munich world is heading. Father Walsh, who first met the Russian in Paris shortly after the war, said in his study yesterday: "If one can visualize living during the Napoleonic era and being acquainted with one of the liberal French Revolutionists 20 years after 1792, one can realize the importance of knowing Kerensky today. But of course the French revolutionists had all been executed and today Kerensky is the only living liberal example of the contemporary event."

As a historian and author of many books on Russia, Dr. Walsh would predict nothing of the future. "The tendency of Russia has always been to separate geographically," he said, "but any attempt by the Russian pretender, Duke Vladimir or any party to tear the Ukraine from Greater Russia would never have the support of either the people or the army."

Father Walsh discussed some of his books on Russia and his theories on that land. His conclusion on the revolution and Kerensky is that a rule of violence soon wears down a people so that they demand peaceful ways of life once more. He pointed out that Kerensky, essentially a parliamentary revolutionist, was swept away by the wave of public feeling which had swept him into office as president of the Russian Republic for nine months in 1917.

The educator would say nothing of Germany or Spain, topics which Kerensky will take up in his speech, but declared the Munich pact and the weeks leading up to it was "one of the greatest stagings for theatrical effect ever to be perpetrated in history." He will give a series of lectures here soon on contemporary Europe.

Delegate Cites Importance of Lima Conference

The Lima Conference was of "vital importance" to women, Mrs. Burton W. Musser, a United States delegate to the parley, told members of the National Women's Trade Union League yesterday at a dinner in her honor at the Raleigh Hotel.

"Two of the resolutions adopted—the Lima declaration of women's rights, and the resolution calling for a reorganization of the Inter-American Commission of Women through the appointment by the respective governments of official members of the commission—are of special interest to women since organizations of this country and others representing millions of members have asked for their passage," she said.

Protection of women going into industry was emphasized throughout the conference, Mrs. Musser stated.

France Orders Mediterranean Naval Display

Show of Force Will Coincide With Visit Of Britain's Fleet

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Jan. 14.—France today ordered displays of force from one end of the Mediterranean to the other, apparently directed against Italy.

The French Atlantic and Mediterranean fleets were ordered to show their strength off Africa's northwest coast in maneuvers which will coincide with the Mediterranean visit of the British home fleet on a regular spring cruise.

Three submarines received instructions to proceed Wednesday to Syria, where demands for freedom from French control have caused rioting.

Commanders Plan Tours.

French army and navy commanders in chief were told to make tours of inspection of African colonial fortifications.

The French government received from its ambassador to Rome a report indicating that little if anything had been accomplished in "appeasement" conversations between Premier Mussolini and Prime Minister Chamberlain despite the "cordial nature" of the visit. The report was based on an interview between Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax and the Ambassador, Andre Francois-Poncet.

Mussolini, it said, did not raise claims for French territory already advanced unofficially by Fascists, and when Chamberlain reminded him of the close link between France and Britain, Il Duce did not ask the British to mediate the French-Italian quarrel.

Demonstration Prepared

The government prepared to make a big demonstration over the launching of the Richelieu, France's first 35,000-ton battleship, at Brest next Tuesday.

Foreign Minister Bonnet was to leave for Geneva to confer with Viscount Halifax, British foreign secretary, before attending a League of Nations Council meeting beginning Monday.

Concern was felt over the swift drive of the Spanish insurgents toward Barcelona, carrying Italian influence closer to France's southern frontier, and over unconfirmed reports of new Italian troop concentrations in East Africa. One of the targets of Fascist territorial clamor has been Djibouti, France's strategic seaport on the Gulf of Aden.

Gen. Maurice Gamelin, chief of staff of national defense, and Rear Admiral Jean Darlan, chief of staff of the navy, will sail Thursday for Algeria and then proceed overland to Casablanca, French Morocco, where the combined Mediterranean and Atlantic fleets will make their rendezvous.

Atlantic Fleet Heads South for War Maneuvers

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 14 (AP).—Seven ships of the Navy's Atlantic Squadron headed south today to join the battle force brought from the Pacific in extensive maneuvers in the Atlantic and Caribbean.

Four battleships and three destroyers steamed out of the Virginia Capes in formation at dawn. Their departure left docks at the naval base and the navy yard practically deserted.

The seven vessels were the destroyer Babbitt, which was the first to sail; the Decatur, flagship of Capt. J. W. Bunkley commander of destroyer squadron 10; the Claxton, the battleship New York, flagship of Rear Admiral Alfred W. Johnson, commanding the Atlantic squadron; the Texas, the Arkansas and the demilitarized battleship Wyoming.

Peace Is Topic For Town Hall Session Tonight

Possibilities of peace in a world plagued by fear of war will occupy attention of Washington's Town Hall audience tonight at 8 o'clock in the Shoreham Hotel, at which Lord Strabolgi, chief whip and deputy leader of the opposition in the House of Lords, British Parliament, will speak.

Lord Strabolgi, who served in the World War as commander of a battleship and later as liaison officer between the British admiralty and the American naval staff, will speak on "Eight to One on Peace." Long an advocate of peace, he is the author of several books and articles on peace and war.

The panel for tonight will include T. Howell Moorhead, Foreign Policy Association; Dr. Ellery Stowell and Barnet Nover, of The Washington Post.

Army to Admit Married Men To Reserve Force

By the Associated Press.

The Army opened its new enlisted reserve force yesterday to married as well as single men.

In an effort to build up its reserve to the authorized strength of 75,000, it amended regulations to permit married men to enroll at any time following honorable discharge from the Regular Army provided they are under 36 years of age and physically qualified.

No actual military service is required of reservists. They are paid $22 a month.

Electric 'Eyes' Scan Alcatraz For Break Tools

By the United Press.

San Francisco, Jan. 14.—G-men and prison officials swarmed over Alcatraz with "portable electric eyes" today. They were shaking down convicts in an effort to find how five felons sawed themselves out of "escape proof" cells in Friday's desperate break for freedom.

The break ended in death for one of the fugitives, Arthur (Doc) Barker, notorious Midwestern outlaw. The others were captured. One of them, Dale Stamphill, 27, Oklahoma bad man, was wounded critically.

The "electric eye," called a "mechanical stool pigeon" in prison parlance, and supposed to detect presence of metal objects, failed after 24 hours to find trace of the saw or other tools which the prisoners used to escape.

James V. Bennett, Federal prison director, en route from Washington to San Francisco by plane, was expected Monday to take charge of the investigation.

Officials Silent

East Hartford, Conn., Jan. 14.—Officials of the United Aircraft Corporation declined today to comment on a State Department report that it was the only American aircraft manufacturer failing to adhere to Secretary Hull's informal embargo on sale of equipment to nations which bomb civilian populations. A high company official indicated a statement might be made within several days.

Hemingway Hangs Haymaker on Bullish Broker

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—Ernest Hemingway, the tough boy of American letters, put a bullish broker who said he was named Edward Chapman, to sleep in the Stork Club early today with an old-fashioned lullaby—one on the chin.

The broker, it was generally agreed, asked for it. Hemingway, as witnesses told the story, was sitting with friends when the broker stumbled against his chair.

"So you're Hemingway, huh?" he mumbled. "Tough guy, huh?"

He started rubbing his hand over the novelist's face, mumbling taunts. Hemingway tried to shoo him away, but the broker rubbed again.

Quentin Reynolds, magazine writer, who was with Hemingway, said:

"Sock him, Ernest, but don't draw blood."

So Ernest lifted one from the floor and put the broker "on ice."

surgent artillery to cut the main coastal highway 15 miles below Tarragona and to block retreat northward of large forces of government troops. Their retreat southward was impossible because the insurgents already control the coast in that direction.

Insurgent center divisions hammered government defenses west of Cervera, their next objective along the main Lerida-Barcelona highway. Occupation of Agramunt and other villages along the network of roads northwest of Cervera seriously menaced government defenses west of Barcelona province.

[Off the Catalan coast five insurgent warships and a submarine fought off an attack by a strong loyalist bomber squadron, the United Press said. An unconfirmed report said that one of the ships had been hit. The warships were assigned to patrol the coast in an effort to prevent any attempt by the loyalist government to move the capital to the south.—Editors note.]

HOUSE OF LIFETIME FURNITURE

Both Houses Give Defense Right of Way

Secret Hearings Set For Tuesday on Plan From Roosevelt

Both Houses of Congress moved yesterday to give early consideration to national defense. There were these developments:

Chairman Sheppard, of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, prepared to begin secret hearings Tuesday on President Roosevelt's recommendations for a $552,000,000 emergency program.

Chairman May, of the House Military Committee, said bills would be offered in the House tomorrow authorizing separate items of the President's program.

Chairman Vinson, of the House Naval Affairs Committee, said he expected to introduce this week a bill to authorize construction of 41 naval ship and air bases, from the Island of Guam to the Caribbean Sea, in a program outlined by the recent Hepburn naval board report.

Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, announced he had drafted a bill for introduction tomorrow proposing regulation, by licensing, for all exports of scrap metals, to conserve supplies which might be vital in war time.

It was learned the Bureau of Mines had arranged to establish a "secondary metals" section to "formulate a sound public policy."

A report gained currency that the Administration would recommend removing all Congressional limitations on size of the Army Air Force, making "the sky the limit," subject only to totals of annual appropriations.

Hope for Hearings Soon

Chairmen May and Vinson said they hoped to get bills under way quickly enough to open hearings by end of this week or the early part of next.

May said bills to be introduced in the House covering the President's program would authorize: Expenditure of $300,000,000 for a minimum of 3,000 new planes for the Army; appropriations for anti-aircraft weapons and other "critical items" for which the President suggested $110,000,000; $32,000,000 for army material "educational orders;" $10,000,000 annually to train pilots and increase officer personnel, and other proposals.

Vinson revealed he expected to have by mid-week a Budget Bureau report on probable cost of the Hepburn naval base program, which some estimates have placed as high as $1,500,000,000. He indicated any expenditure would be spread over a three to five-year period.

Vinson to Call Leahy

Vinson said he would call Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of naval operations, and Rear Admiral A. J. Hepburn, who headed the naval base study, as first witnesses. He added he would invite Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, who has been reporting to the Naval Aeronautics Advisory Committee on European air developments, but with little hope the flier would appear.

Control over exports of all scrap metals, as to be proposed by Schwellenbach, in addition to conserving supplies would give the Administration a powerful economic weapon in world affairs. The Senator remarked that scrap iron "is the same as bullets—a means to make war."

Licenses are required now for exports of tin and tin scrap, a metal which this country imports in large quantities. National defense experts have warned that heavy exports are draining scrap iron supplies. The War Department has been considering a plan to hoard supplies of all secondary metals.

Scrap Exports Increased

Exports of scrap iron alone increased from 227,500 long tons in 1932 to 4,095,000 in 1937. Japan increased her purchases from 164,000 tons to 1,091,000. Italian orders rose from 6,700 to 381,000 and German from 100 to 88,000 long tons.

Advocates of making "the sky the limit" on numbers of Army warplanes said there was no thought the air force should be built in the early future beyond the increase recommended by the President, but only that no arbitrary limit should be set.

Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, of the House Appropriations Committee, said the deficiency appropriation of $35,000,000 asked by Mr. Roosevelt to supplement this year's funds for naval construction would be submitted to the House in the first general deficiency bill in mid February.

Washington Slighted in List of 12 Best-Hatted Men

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT | VICE PRESIDENT GARNER | POSTMASTER GEN. FARLEY | SENATOR HAM LEWIS | PATRICK HURLEY | SECRETARY HULL | GEORGE ALLEN

Last week in New York a committee of men who make, sell and study hats named what they chose to call the 12 best hatted men in America. But not one on the list was a Washingtonian.

Which, according to Washingtonians, was very much like a man talking about aviators and failing to mention Lindbergh.

Washington is as much a capital of hats as it is capital of the country. Here as nowhere else are to be found world-famous examples of high hats, soft hats, brass hats, hats which you talk through, and hats that are passed around; the latter especially noticeable at election time.

As for best-hatted men, in this respect as in some others, the occupant of the most prominent residence in town, is tops. Especially in relation to the hat of hats; the high silk tile that is acknowledged even in New York as incontrovertible evidence of good taste and style.

The last assertion is based not on any one's testimony in the District, but on the dictum of Maximiliam Fluegelman, of New York, who has made high hats for every President from the first President Roosevelt to the second. Fluegelman asserts, as reported in the January issue of Fortune, that President Roosevelt is the best high-hat wearer ever to grace the White House.

In the high-hat field Secretary Hull is no slouch either, as anyone will testify who has ever seen him in such a topper, or seen photographs of him wearing one.

When it comes to more informal headgear, it is certain that Senator James Hamilton Lewis will have to take his hat off to no man; although certain to do so to any lady. And whether it be a straw, or a derby, Postmaster General Farley need not fear the competition of any.

It would be possible to list a great many names if it were at all necessary to argue the question of outstandingly well-hatted men in Washington. George E. Allen, for example, former Commissioner for the District, wears a soft hat with a jaunty swagger that might be envied by the most insouciant of Hollywood glamour men.

For those who would like to make their own comparisons, the list of 12 selected by a committee interested in a recent convention of the men's hat trade in New York is appended. It included Marshall Field, Jack Dempsey, Herbert Bayard Swope, Adolphus Busch 3d, Grover A. Whalen, William Gaxton, musical comedy star; Tyrone Power, James Melton, singer; Bing Crosby, Fred Astaire, Robert Cobb, vice president of the Hollywood Baseball Club, and Frank M. Chapman, jr., moving picture actor.

District to Get Day's Respite From Winter

Cloudy and Warmer Forecast for Today; Sled Crash Kills Boy

Buried for two days by a 4½-inch snowfall, January's spring weather will stage a temporary comeback today when the temperature will reach 45 degrees under cloudy skies, the Weather Bureau predicted last night.

Although a bright sun thawed icy streets yesterday, a 12-year-old boy suffered a fractured leg in a sledding accident, only serious injury of the day attributed to the weather, though several minor accidents were reported.

The boy, Chester Lewis, of 4930 Mead avenue northeast, was injured when his sled crashed into a railroad underpass pole in the 1400 block of Eastern avenue northeast. He was taken to Gallinger Hospital.

The mercury climbed from a low of 26 degrees yesterday at 5 a. m. to a high of 36 at 3 p. m. Colder weather will return tomorrow, it was said.

31 Die in Nation

Catherine Hammett, 22, of 1335 North Eighteenth street, Arlington, Va., was badly bruised when the sled she was riding at Eighteenth street and Wilson boulevard was struck by a hit-run automobile last night. At Georgetown Hospital her condition was said to be undetermined.

Thomas Carr, jr., of 2033 Lawrence street northeast, received head injuries when the sled on which he was coasting in the 1700 block of Newton street northeast overturned. He was treated at Casualty Hospital.

Mrs. Mary M. Moore, 37, of 1239 Fourth street southwest, suffered contusions of the right hip when she slipped on ice at Fourth and O streets southwest. She was transferred to Gallinger Hospital after treatment at Casualty.

Police precincts were swamped with calls for sand on slippery streets and sidewalks and six trucks were busy distributing sand during the day.

As Washingtonians cleared walks of slush yesterday, a great part of the Nation was digging from under record snowfalls which glazed highways from the Atlantic Coast to the Rocky Mountains and claimed at least 31 lives.

Although introduced to a 7-inch snowfall at Thanksgiving, Washingtonians showed no "seasoning" at all, reports at the District Building indicated.

Four telephone operators were kept busy all Friday night calling for municipal snowplows, shovels and WPA workers. Normally two operators handle District Building calls, said Walter E. Kern, head of the Electrical Department and supervisor of the switchboard.

Senators Due To Act Soon on U.S. Pay Basis

Bulow Sends His Own And McCarran Bills To Commission

Early action in the Senate on two bills to establish a scale of minimum Government salaries was promised yesterday by Chairman Bulow, of the Senate Civil Service Committee.

He said he sent to the Civil Service Commission for a report of his own measure to fix the minimum Government wage at $1,200 and has conferred with Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, regarding the latter's bill to start the pay scale at $1,500.

McCarran said he would reintroduce his measure this week.

Chairman Bulow also has asked for reports from the Civil Service Commission on the Neely retirement bill, on which extensive hearings were held last session, and a new bill by Senator Neely (Democrat), of West Virginia, to govern State employes who are paid in part from Federal funds.

A fourth measure sent to the commission proposes to amend section 204 of the classification act to permit three one-year extensions of service beyond the mandatory retirement age of 70. Such extensions can now be made only by executive order.

Ball Set for Thursday

West Virginia's delegation in Congress will be honor guests Thursday at a reception and dance in the Raleigh Hotel given by the West Virginia State Society, it was announced yesterday.

District Tax Plan Assailed on Two Fronts; Lusk Denounces Surplus; Sales Levy Hit

not known how near the new taxes may come to the estimates.

Two years ago, it was recalled, the House District Committee and others overguessed the return of the business privilege tax of $1,000,000.

Deficit Estimated at $4,250,000

Auditor Daniel J. Donovan now estimates the 1940 deficit at about $4,250,000, or almost $1,000,000 more than does the Budget Bureau. This is based on discontinuation of the $1.75 realty tax rate and the business privilege tax.

As the new tax proposals include repeal of the intangible personal property tax, which now produces more than $3,000,000, the probable deficit would be increased to between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000, he said.

To meet this the advisory committee and the experts are proposing a 2 per cent retail sales tax that is expected to yield $6,000,000, an income tax that begins at $15,000, to produce $1,250,000, a 5 per cent corporation tax to raise another $1,250,000, and a uniform public utility levy of 4 per cent on gross receipts, to add another $300,000.

Sliding Realty Rate Urged

These new taxes alone would produce $8,800,000, with the realty rate left at $1.50. However, the experts are recommending that the Commissioners be authorized to raise or lower this tax between $1.50 and $1.75, as necessary to balance the budget each fiscal year.

"At one time," Lusk said, "we had almost $10,000,000 extra cash in the treasury. "Because this money was lying around, excessive amounts were spent for parks, and enough ground was purchased for a municipal center that would serve a city the size of Philadelphia. Had there been no surplus, the white elephant down at Pennsylvania avenue and John Marshall place never would have been acquired."

Representative Schulte, a member of the House District Committee, announced he would fight the proposed retail sales tax "to the bitter end."

Favors Income Tax Provision

He said he favors the income tax provision of the program, however, but believes it should be lowered to include incomes in excess of $10,000, rather than to begin at $15,000.

"That would be just above the salaries of members of Congress," he explained. "Of course, we could never put through an income tax that would hit the salaries of members."

D.C. Youth Council Joins Fight to Restore WPA Fund

Washington Youth Council yesterday joined a move to increase the $725,000,000 WPA deficiency bill, passed in the House, to $1,000,000,000 through action in the Senate. The council urged all members and friends to petition Vice President Garner and members of the Senate to increase the fund.

The council pointed out that a cut in WPA funds generally will also hit the District. It quoted a recent survey that there are 50,000 unemployed in Washington, of which about one-fourth were between 15 and 24. At present, 8,404 persons qualified for WPA here are unable to get assignments because of lack of funds, the council said.

It urged increase of the WPA appropriation; passage of the American youth act and extension of the social security act; a youth survey for the District; a fight for District suffrage.

Alfredo Curradi Rites Tomorrow

Funeral services for Alfredo Curradi, 65-year-old Italian-born Washingtonian, will be held tomorrow at 10 a. m. at his home, 2306 Thirty-eighth street northwest. Mr. Curradi died Friday after a long illness.

Born and educated in Florence, Italy, Mr. Curradi had lived in Washington since 1905. He was a retired employe of the Shoreham Hotel, and belonged to the Felice Cavallotti Lodge, largest Italian organization in the District.

Mr. Curradi leaves his wife, Mrs. Barbara Curradi, and a son, Alfred D. Curradi. Burial will be at Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Fireplace—Literally

French Grimes moved into a new house at 6644 Eastern avenue northwest, and built a fire in the fireplace. The framework around the fireplace ignited and he had to call firemen to extinguish the flames. They estimated damage at $75.

Guardsmen Will Attend Church Today

McCallum.

Mt. Pleasant Group Discusses Taxes

A proposal that the Mount Pleasant Citizens Association indorse the policies of the Citizens Committee for Fair Taxation was referred to the association's executive committee for "appropriate action" at a meeting last night in the Mount Pleasant Public Library. The proposed tax program for the District calls for lifting the present business privilege tax, opposition to a sales tax, and an income tax on the basis of "ability to pay."

Harry C. Grove, president of the Connecticut Avenue Citizens Association, a visitor at the Mount Pleasant meeting, pointed out two reasons for supporting a sales tax—because thousands of tourists visit Washington annually and "quite a little revenue can be acquired from them" and because "it's the kind of a tax that you don't feel."

fied, the same situation inevitably will occur again."

Landowners have demanded a Federal investigation of the activities of Whitfield and of Hans Baasch, supervisor of the La Forge project.

Robert K. Ryland, State director of the National Emergency Council, returning to St. Louis after making an inspection of the area, said he believed the demonstration was "fostered by subversive elements."

He said he had talked to "dozens" of colored men and women and all were waiting for "Uncle Sam to give them a white house with a porch, a barn, well and a span of mules." None of those questioned, he said, had been evicted from their tenant homes.

Deliberate Violation of Law Charged in Lewis Relief Report

Welfare

mation showing repeated demonstrations of bad faith by the relief clients, "some with known criminal records."

Street and Miss M. Alice Hill, director of public assistance, were accused of having "consistently failed to comply" with the procedure of referring cases of possible fraud to the corporation counsel or the district attorney, but instead deciding the cases themselves.

Members of the Public Assistance Division staff, the report said, "show all too apparent reluctance to become complainants in court actions."

One of the 30 fraud cases presented to the Congressional committees deals with a woman who misrepresented the number of children she had to support. She had three, but one had been committed to a school for girls.

Although this case was investigated several times, the report asserted, the fraud was not halted for two-and-a-half years, and even then not reported as such to Miss Hill. This case, Investigator McCoy commented, reflects not only negligent case work, but also that the Public Assistance Division is deliberately violating the law."

A second case is that of a Government employe, receiving $1,080 per year, who fraudulently obtained $112 in relief funds.

The Public Assistance Division took action to get a refund of the money, but Investigator McCoy observed, in August, 1938, "four years after the perpetration of the fraud," the unpaid balance was $5.25, although the man was still employed by the Government. Apparently this case never even got into Director Street's hands, McCoy commented.

The report also told of a WPA worker who received old-age assistance. The wife was found to be a "numbers" writer. The district attorney decided prosecution was not warranted. To this Investigator McCoy declared in the report: "It is believed the district attorney would revise his decision after reading the case history, which was not given him or called for."

As a result of the decision, the old age assistance was resumed and a case worker later reported there were indications that the wife was still in the "numbers game."

$370 Sent to Jersey

Another case dealing with a fraud of $370 by a woman who maintained residence in New Jersey while receiving District relief. In his investigation, McCoy declared there were elements of a conspiracy to defraud the Public Assistance Division and the Government, and possibility of forgery. He charged gross negligence of investigation, and added "a complete investigation may serve to bring to the foreground certain alleged improper relationships and actions of the part of Public Assistance Division employes who were in a position to further such a conspiracy."

McCoy observed that since the case worker and supervisor are bonded, and the bond covers "faithful discharge of duties," perhaps the latter case would be a good one for the corporation counsel to review for purpose of giving an opinion as to liability under the bonds.

Teacher Is Accused

Concealment of employment by a night school teacher is another of the 30 cases reviewed in the report. She obtained $1,496.95 in relief funds fraudulently, it is charged. The report quoted Street as closing the case without action, "inasmuch as it is quite evident that the family is in no condition to repay."

McCoy accused Street and Miss Hill of having "improperly" handled the case, and said Miss Hill had "colored" a summary of the case in favor of the client. This case, the report read, should have been referred to the corporation counsel for legal decision and should be reopened for legal review.

A Letter Is Quoted

In another instance McCoy quotes a purported letter from Miss Hill to Street as saying: "Then I wonder if this program of public relief should be built to catch chiselers or help those in need."

McCoy averred that such was "a very unusual attitude for one holding a position of trust, one who annually governs the dispensation of a huge amount of public funds . . . and this in face of the fact that . . . legislators have found it necessary to provide punishment for those who violate the law."

Street, in commenting on the report, emphatically denied that the 30 cases were typical of the general situation. "The investigator examined only our complaint files and the cases he picked had already been singled out for action by us," Street said.

Reynolds Defends Board

Remarked Frederick W. McReynolds, chairman of the Public Welfare Board: "Even if all Mr. Lewis has said to date is true—which is scarcely thought to be possible—Washington's number of fraud cases still ranks low along with other cities. Everybody has been bothered with a certain amount of chiseling."

Recommendation of a complaint bureau to handle cases of fraud won Street's approval.

"It is one of the many good things recommended in the report, Street declared. "We know we have not been doing a complete job and have been pointing out our defects for two years. But as the report also clearly shows, we need more funds and a larger personnel.

Flames Destroy LeatherSheds Here

Firemen fought a blaze for an hour last night before controlling flames that ruined two sheds in the rear of 627 Pennsylvania avenue southeast.

Mrs. Otilia M. Kennelly, runs a leather and shoe findings store at that address. The buildings and contents were completely ruined. Estimating damage at $500, she said it was caused by neighborhood boys who gathered there to smoke, despite her protests.

Fontaine May Quit Numbers, Gamblers Hear

Move Is Expected To Divert G-men From Gaming House

By Edward T. Folliard

Professional gamblers expressed the opinion yesterday that Jimmy La Fontaine—or the Philadelphia mob which uses him as a front man—may withdraw from the numbers game racket to keep G-men away from the big gambling casino on Bladensburg road, just across the District line in Prince Georges County.

The gambling house, even without the profits from numbers, is a rich piece of property. La Fontaine made much more than $1,000,000 there long before the numbers craze arrived. If there is any doubt about that proof can be found in Jimmy's income tax reports. In 1932 he paid the Federal Government $206,000 in back taxes for the years 1925-26, and then went to jail for nine months because he didn't pay it sooner.

Dislikes Numbers Racket

Gamblers who know Jimmy say that he never did like the numbers racket, prefering to take his profits from wagering done in the Bladensburg road establishment on horses, dice, roulette, poker and blackjack. The numbers business was added by the Philadelphia men who "muscled in" on Jimmy four or five years ago.

If the numbers business is abandoned, and the runners are not sent across the District line to collect bets, it would appear that the G-men would have no jurisdiction. Then "Jimmy's Place" would have nothing to fear but the Prince Georges County police, who for reasons best known to themselves have allowed it to flourish unmolested for 20 years or more.

The law under which it is reported the Federal Bureau of Investigation will seek to smash Jimmy's and the other numbers headquarters in Prince Georges County is the law against criminal conspiracy.

Conspiracy Theory Advanced

The theory is that since every law of the District is a statute of the United States, and since the numbers operators in Prince Georges County continue to send their runners into this city to collect millions of dollars annually in numbers bets, they are conspiring to violate the District's antinumbers law. Also, it is reasoned, they are violating the Federal law against criminal conspiracy.

How much of the fat numbers bonanza here goes to Jimmy's place is debatable. Some say it gets the lion's share. Whatever "the take" amounts to, however, it is not likely that it is so great that the operators would sacrifice the big gambling house itself to hold on to it.

Business was booming at Jimmy's all last week, notwithstanding the headlines that told how G-men had ben turned loose on Prince Georges gambling headquarters. Those who didn't choose to go in their own cars or in taxicabs were taken out at the expense of the house. Jimmy's operates a fleet of cars in which customers are hauled at intervals from the corner of Seventh and E streets northwest.

Find Elaborate Layout

In Jimmy's, the customer finds the most elaborate gambling establishment between Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and Miami. He must not be drunk when he arrives, nor must be carry a bottle. Women are barred. If the customer wins heavily, the house offers to have an armed escort see him home in safety. Although several men have sued Jimmy for their losses, most patrons praise the place for the treatment accorded them.

Recently the Prince Georges County Board of Commissioners ordered the county police to close all gambling establishments. The commissioners are prominent men, above reproach. Strangely, however, few people in Prince Georges County would believe that Jimmy's would ever be closed.

A perusal of old newspaper files explains the skepticism. Time after time, orders have been given to close Jimmy's Place, but nothing has ever been done to keep it closed.

Inquiry Fizzled

On September 25, 1935, the county commissioners sent an order to J. J. Crowley, then county chief of police, to investigate and determine what kind of an establishment La Fontaine was operating. Chief Crowley reported back two weeks later that an investigation had been made, but that no evidence of gambling had been uncovered.

"There was a well-equipped kitchen and lunchroom," he told the commissioners, "a white woman cook and necessary waiters. A restaurant license was exhibited, as well as a cigarette license and a trader's license."

The Food Must Be Good

The food must be mighty good at Jimmy's. On an afternoon, about the time the horses are running, 200 or more men gather at the establishment. And at nights it is packed again, long after the dinner hour, while the house cars fly back and forth from Seventh and E streets with more customers.

They are very particular at Jimmy's Place as to the diner's identity. You have to be vouched for. If you are not, a husky fellow at the door will give you the bounce.

Hazen Indorses Movement To Curb D. C. 'Charity Rackets'

Commissioners to Confer Friday With Church, Social Welfare and Business Groups on Supervision Plan

Proposed efforts to curb alleged "charity rackets" in the District yesterday won the indorsement of Commissioner Hazen, who accepted requests for a conference Friday with representatives of the Federation of Churches, the Council of Social Agencies and the Better Business Bureau.

The conference will discuss plans for licensing and supervision of so-called charitable agencies whose methods of collection and distribution of funds are under suspicion.

Mrs. Louisia S. Roberts, exeutive secretary of the Council of Social Agencies, said last night a similar effort failed three or four years ago.

Accuses "5 or 6" Agencies

"I know personally of five or six agencies that are not doing the things that they ought to be doing," Mrs. Roberts said. "And there may be many others. They are largely family affairs. They have no representative citizens sitting as a board of directors to guarantee their activities. Their books are not audited by public accountants. And they are not under supervision by anybody. No one can tell whether their funds are being properly expended or not."

"Some such agencies have a telephone address and call up prospective donors, after which they send collectors around to get the money. They often ask for funds to help hungry women and children, and some of them do some feeding of children. They give some of them lunch, but of what the lunches consist I do not know."

Similar charges were made by Mrs. Margaret Ford, executive secretary of the Travelers' Aid Society, in her annual report Friday.

"These racket agencies are built up on the basis of the uncared for people for whom neither the funds of our society nor of the public assistance division in the District government are able to care," Mrs. Ford said last night. "Some of them do offer some help, but very little."

The Rev. John L. Mixon, executive secretary of the Federation of Churches, said the experience of his office had been largely with agencies based on religious grounds.

"Some of these organizations have been here year after year," the Rev. Mr. Mixon said. "Then for a while there were one or two new ones every week. One of them that we investigated lately gave an address at 1321 A street northwest. That turned out to be a spot on the mail.

Fake Bible School Cited

"A strange thing is that some persons, who would not give to the Community Chest because they said its overhead was too high, give to such solicitors, whose overhead ranges from 50 to 95 per cent, whereas the Chest operates at 7½ per cent.

"There is one woman who goes about as a Christian worker, and who I found was on any number of church budgets, because she said she was conducting a daily vacation Bible school. Then when I went down there last summer, there was no Bible school.

"There is one organization with three or four operators who make as much as $100 a week, taking 25 cents on every dollar. They even sell 'sucker lists' to each other.

"I see the whole thing from the church angle," the Rev. Mr. Mixon concluded. "We are trying to get the church groups interested in constructive work, and to re-direct such giving into channels where it will do more good."

Policy Charges Hold 2 Men And 2 Women

Police Arrest Them In Lottery, Gaming Campaign Here

Two men and two women were arrested yesterday and charged with violations of the District gaming and lottery laws as police continued their campaign of harassment against numbers operators.

The women, Mary E. Edelin, colored, 28, first block Dingman place northwest, and Eva E. Therman, colored, 38, 500 block Second street northwest, were seized in the 500 block Second street northwest. Both were charged with operating a lottery and possession of lottery slips.

The men were arrested in the 1100 block Ninth street northwest by Sergt. George Deyoe and members of the vice squad.

Milton D. Reeves, 38, 4000 block Tenth street northwest, operator of a novelty shop, was accused of two lottery counts and one charge of setting up a gaming table. Deyoe said his men made several race bets with Reeves. He was released under $4,000 bail to appear before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage tomorrow.

The second suspect in the Ninth street raid gave his name as Calvin D. Hoagland, 27, 1000 Irving street northeast. He was arrested in his automobile outside of Reeves' novelty shop. Raiders said they found 250 numbers books in his car and a quantity of used slips. Some of the slips showed bets of as much as $5 on a single number.

Police were notified of the arrest Friday night at Riverdale, Md., of Numerian M. Del Rosario, of Riverdale, on a charge of operating a lottery. He was arrested on a United States commissioners' warrant swore to by Sergt. Deyoe in Baltimore last week. Deyoe said he was wanted in the investigation of the large numbers ring, said to have been headed by Juan Quijano, District lawyer, who was arrested last week.

Del Rosario was taken to Baltimore and will be returned here probably Monday.

Lyon Park Infant Smothered in Crib

A 2-month-old Lyon Park, Va., baby was smothered to death yesterday under the blanket of its crib.

The child, Margaret Elaine, was found dead by the mother, Mrs. Harold Price, of 747 North Barton street. The county ambulance crew and Capt. Charles Downs, of the Fort Myer medical staff, worked over her in vain for an hour. The father is employed in Washington.

Arlington County Coroner W. C. Welburn issued a verdict of accidental death.

ArmyNotReady To Defend U.S., Johnson Says

Planes, Guns Reserve Supplies Lacking, He Tells D.C. Sojourners

At present the United States Army is not prepared to defend America, Assistant Secretary of War Louis A. Johnson told the Washington chapter, National Sojourners, at their annual banquet last night at the Mayflower Hotel.

Rear Admiral William R. Furlong, chief of ordnance, United States Navy, was installed as president of the chapter by Brig. Gen. R. S. Abernethy, of Hampton, Va., national commander.

Johnson, with the hope that "the fires of hate which blaze so mercilessly in Europe and in Asia" might "never find fuel in our favored country," pointed to efforts this Nation has made to avoid conflict since the World War.

We Dreamed; They Worked

"For 20 years," he said, "we in America sincerely tried to promote good fellowship, not only in America but among all nations in all corners of the globe. We arbitrated. We conciliated. We forgave our debtors large slices of their legal and moral financial obligations. We encouraged trade treaties. We denounced force as a governmental policy. We led in disarmament. We reduced our Navy. We skeletonized our Army. We brought home our Marines.

"While we were dreaming peace and working toward peace on this continent, the rest of the world turned its attentions toward war and toward preparations for conflict.

"Today the air is charged with reports of battle and with threats of hostilities. Force and the readiness to use force as a weapon of national policy play a dominant role in international affairs.

"Must" Be Prepared

". . . If live we must in a world dominated by power politics, we must see to it that our survival is guaranteed. We must be prepared to defend our homes, our rights and our ideals against those who would trespass against us."

"At present," he said, "our Army is not prepared to defend America. It requires airplanes of every type; skilled operators to fly them; trained combat crews to man them; experienced mechanics to maintain them, efficient equipment to protect them and ample bases to support them.

New Rifles the Best

"We need tanks and machine guns in greater quantity and of better performance. We must augment our new semi-automatic shoulder rifles which the world regards as the peer in small arms. We must add antiaircraft guns. We must streamline our infantry and cavalry divisions.

"We must build up a reserve supply of our military needs, so there would be no need in an emergency to dislocate industry's normal services."

The invocation was offered by Maj. A. A. McCallum, followed by Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, retired, who delivered the preamble. Also on the program were a tableau in costume, a tenor solo by George A. Myers, parade of the colors, toasts to the President and to the flag, a soprano solo by Elsie Jorss Reilly, a xylophone solo by Charles Owen and an address by Eugene E. Thompson, grand master of Masons in the District.

Capital Newsmen Fete 'Freshmen' Of Both Houses

The largest turnout of "old time" Washington newspaper correspondents on record met last night for dinner at the National Press Club. "Charlie" Hamilton, 83-year-old dean of them all, extended greetings to newcomers in the House and Senate.

Hamilton originally from Buffalo, N. Y., presented a cartoon of themselves to New York Senator James Meade, of Buffalo, and Representative Stephen Bolles, of Janesville, Wis., former Buffalo newspaper editor.

On January 10, "Charlie" celebrated the fifty-fifth anniversary of his admission to the press gallery of the House. In 1885, he was refused admission to the White House because he had written a "scurrilous" story of a family quarrel between President Cleveland and his sister.

Senator Chen Gurney, of South Dakota, and several recently elected members of the House were among the guests.

A toast to the memory of Morton Milford, old timer and assistant to Harry Hopkins when he was WPA administrator was proposed by Arthur Hacten, recently elected president of the Press Club. Maj. J. S. Richardson presided.

Asked to Rope Street for Sleds, D. C. Dumps Sand

Out in Congress Heights yesterday a lot of future citizens received a lesson at first hand in the ways of government.

They have a very nice hill, on Trenton street between Nichols avenue and Brothers street southeast, where there is little traffic and only one house. Hearing of other streets being roped off for sledding, a delegation of parents asked District police to rope off the block for the operation of Christmas sleds.

Yesterday a truck drove to Trenton street, halted, and its attendants started dumping sand on the hill, unmoved by tears of the children and imprecations of their parents.

"We got our orders," the driver said.

Hit-Run Victim Here Is Baltimore Man, 55

A man found critically injured Friday on Rhode Island avenue just over the District line in Brentwood, Md., apparently the victim of a hit-run driver, was identified last night as John Kemp, 55, of Baltimore. Kemp was still in a serious condition at Casualty Hospital.

Spirit of '76 Leads the March at Sojourners' Banquet

While the rumble of a drum echoed through the banquet hall at the Mayflower Hotel, members of the National Sojourners Club gathered for the annual dinner. From left, Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, Maj. F. Board to Meet In February On Basic Pay

4,000 Women, Minors Will Be Affected By Provisions

A basic weekly wage for more than 4,000 women and minors in the local manufacturing and wholesale industries will be considered by the minimum wage conference the first week in February.

Members of the Minimum Wage Board will meet tomorrow in executive session to discuss plans prior to naming of nine representatives to serve on the conference.

It was stated that the proposed conference will bring all remaining women and minors not yet affected by a wage order under the wage laws.

Three members each, representing the employers, employes and the public, will be selected after the groups excluding the public, have had an opportunity to nominate their own candidates. The board then will name the members of the conference.

Five wage orders have already been set by the board—for retail trades, public housekeeping, laundries and dry cleaning establishments, beauty culture and office workers. All orders, except the one for office workers, are now effective. The order for office workers with a minimum of $17 per week will become effective March 9.

Approximately 30,000 women and minors will be covered when the office workers' decree becomes effective.

Symphony's Brass Wins the Acclaim Of D. C. Youngsters

The National Symphony Orchestra's brass section captured the fancy of 2,000 Washington school children yesterday at Constitution Hall, but it wasn't the kind of "brass" found on Broadway.

What held the group was a quartet—three trombones and a tuba in a demonstration of the part brass instruments play in a symphony orchestra.

Some of the youngsters, hearing symphonic music for the first time, failed to understand why Conductor Kindler didn't "swing it," but the quartet, composed of Robert E. Clark, Edward Gummel, Robert Cassella and Philip Silverman, playing trombones and tuba, quieted the entire group with Mozart's "Ave Verum."

A xylophone solo of Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Flight of the Bumblebee," three German dances, "The Canary Bird," "The Organ Grinder," and "The Sleigh Bells," by Mozart, also won approval of the youthful critics.

After Dr. Kindler told the story of the opera "Carmen," the youngsters went on the stage to request individual solos by special instruments. The last concert in the series is scheduled for February 26.

Navy May Use Blimps to Hunt Submarines

Naval blimps probably will be used in the future to spot enemy mines and submarines, it was revealed yesterday.

Explaining that the K-2 new Navy semi-rigid aircraft, can idle along at low altitudes, experts pointed out that officers of the balloons will be able to see far below the surface and detect undersea vessels and explosives. Destroyers and planes then would be informed of the location of the mines or submarines so depth bombs could be be dropped.

"The special usefulness of non-rigids," it was said, "was largely developed by the allies, particularly Great Britain, during the World War. Germany relied almost entirely on its large rigid Zeppelins. The nickname 'blimp' was coined by the British from the technical designation, B-limp type."

Because of their long cruising range, the small lighter-than-aircraft can take off in the morning and remain up all day.

Also, in bad weather they can stay on patrol duty when other aircraft are grounded. During the last year of the war, for example, British blimps cruised 8,000,000 miles and were prevented by bad weather from flying only 8 per cent of the time. The non-rigid aircraft were used to convoy ships and the British admiralty has stated that no convoy, guided by blimps, was ever attacked successfully.

The craft also are extremely valuable for cheaply training officers and crews for dirigibles, it was said.

Construction and operation of blimps by the United States started during the war and has continued since as improvements in size, speed, performance and the use of radio and other equipment have been made.

The K-2, now completing flight tests, has two nine-cylinder engines.

The 246-foot envelope has a capacity of 404,000 cubic feet of helium and 25,000 pounds can be lifted.

Accommodating a crew of seven, the car has stations for pilots, navigator, a radioman and a mechanic. Two bunks and three reclining chairs are installed.

Colored Bandits Get Two Chickens Special Delivery

Three colored hold-up men worked a ruse last night and got away with two cooked chickens—but they didn't get any gravy in the way of money.

Rothwell W. Burke, 20, of the 600 block Howard place northwest, an employe of Wharton's Chicken Loaf, 2213 Fourteenth street northwest, was sent to deliver two chickens to 143 W street northwest. Arriving at the house, Burke found himself faced by three men who demanded the chickens and any money he might have.

Burke put up a fight, and was shot in the arm. The thieves left with the chickens. Burke was treated at Freedmens Hospital.

Md. Democrats Name Sasscer For Congress

Will Oppose A. K. Love In Special Election Three Weeks Away

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Jan. 14.—Lansdale G. Sasscer embarked tonight on a drive for election to the United States House of Representatives which he hopes to obtain with the same ease with which he won re-election to the State Senate since his first term in 1922.

The Upper Marlboro attorney was nominated today by the Democratic State central committee as their standard bearer against A. Kingsley Love, Leonardtown attorney, who was named last week by the Republican committee.

Election in Three Weeks

Only three weeks of campaigning remains before the special election for Fifth District voters seeking a successor to Representative Stephen W. Gambrill who died December 12 after representing southern Maryland in Congress since 1924.

"I am very garteful to the Democratic Party for selecting me as the candidate to succeed the late Congressman Gambrill," Sasscer said. "If elected I will assume my duties with the full realization of the responsibilities of the office and my obligations to the people of the district."

Twice president of the State Senate and a Democratic gubernatorial candidate in last year's primary, the 45-year-old war veteran promised:

States Platform

"In matters of legislation I shall continue to pursue the same course which I followed in the Maryland Senate: To personally weigh all legislation and give careful consideration to the suggestions of all groups in order to get from our combined views the best thought on all matters of legislation of policy which make for the best interest of the people of the District."

His nomination today was a formality long expected. Sasscer announced his candidacy several days after Gambrill died of a heart attack in a Washington physician's office.

Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor promised support. He was assured of the gubernatorial nomination when Sasscer swung the seven electoral votes of Prince Georges County, which he carried to O'Conor. Sasscer's action climaxed a bitter fight between O'Conor and Mayor Howard W. Jackson of Baltimore. The seven votes gave O'Conor the needed number of votes.

Dr. McCormick Urges Unity to Fight Atheism

Catholic U. Rector Backs 8 Day Crusade To Start Next Week

Launching a "Church Unity Week" celebration at Catholic University with an address over radio station WJSV yesterday afternoon, the Right Rev. Patrick J. McCormick, vice rector of the institution, urged his hearers to "unite in a solid front against their common enemy—the unbeliever."

The eight-day crusade, centered at the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, will be opened Wednesday night with a speech by the Very Rev. Paul James Francis, S. A., of Garrison, N. Y., who founded the "Church Unity Octave" more than 30 years ago. The Most Rev. John M. McNamara, Auxiliary Bishop of Baltimore, will preside at that meeting.

All Have Common Foe

"Catholics, Jews, Protestants—all believers in God are today confronted with a common enemy," said Father Macormick, "and it would appear that the future will witness, not a conflict between dissenting creeds of churches, but a life and death struggle between those who believe in God and those who deny His existence."

Earlier in his talk, Father McCormick, introduced by Rev. Brother M. Andrew, of the Missionary Servants of the Most Holy Trinity, and president of the Catholic University Conference of Clerics and Religious, described the origin and significance of the "unity octave," organized under the auspices of the Friars of the Atonement of Graymoor, Garrison, N. Y.

Father Francis, he pointed out, founder of the Society of the Atonement, was a convert from Anglicanism, who in 1909 with his community were received corporately into the Catholic Church.

Dr. Cartwright to Speak

Father Francis, who will speak on "The Return of the Other Sheep to the Fold," at 8 p. m. Wednesday, will be followed Thursday by Dr. John K. Cartwright, rector of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, whose subject will be "The Return of Oriental Separatists."

Other speakers include Dr. John Tracy Elbis, professor of modern European history, Catholic University, Friday; the Very Rev. Dr. Raphael M. Huber, Saturday; the Rev. Joseph Fenton, Sunday; the Very Rev. William Lonergan, Monday; the Very Rev. Ignatius Smith, O. P., Tuesday, and Dr. Aloysius Burggraff, C. S. P., Wednesday.

Telephone Man Finds Woman Dead, Receiver in Hand

Miss Hortense Giesking, 45, was found dead in her apartment at 1731 K street northwest last night when a telephone company repairman called to investigate why the telephone was off its hook.

The telephone man, G. E. Marshall, of 146 U street northeast, said he knocked on Miss Geisking's door at about 8 p. m., and when the door opened by itself, walked in to find her lying on the floor clutching the receiver in her hand.

Dr. Paul Kiernan, of Emergency Hospital, said Miss Giesking had probably been dead since noon and friends said they had talked with her at about 11 a. m., and at that time she was evidently not well. Police believe death was due to natural causes.

Rep. Snyder Asks Army Air Training For 50,000 Boys

A three-year program to train 50,000 youths to fly was recommended yesterday by Chairman Snyder of the House sub-committee on war appropriations. President Roosevelt recently announced a National Youth Administration project to train 20,000.

"My plan would produce 50,000 trained pilots, mechanics and technicians by 1943, and would save the Government money in the meanwhile," Snyder said, suggesting Army enlistments until the 50,000 quota is filled.

"Then, instead of paying them $2.50 a month to work for WPA, as they do in my State, the Government would have to pay them $42 a month . . .," he said.

Maj. G. F. Eliot To Speak Tonight On Defense Issue

Seal Seeking To Open Homes To Beauticians

Amendments to Be Sent Budget Bureau For Early Action

Home beauty treatments by cosmetologists — prohibited now—would be permitted under the terms of several amendments prepared by Corporation Counsel Seal, it was disclosed yesterday.

The proposed amendments, drawn up by order of the Board of Commissioners, are intended to meet the objections raised recently in a petition signed by more than 240 Washingtonians, including Mrs. Louis D. Brandeis, wife of the Supreme Court justice.

Commissioner Hazen said he saw no reason why independent operators could not practice in the homes of clients, as long as they were under strict supervision by the health department and the Board of Cosmetology. Lieut. Col. David McCoach, jr., Engineer Commissioner, supported Hazen in this viewpoint.

The petition asserted that many local beauticians were being forced on relief because of the regulation prohibiting beauty treatments at the homes of clients.

The agitation for a revised cosmetology act was also fostered by J. Harry Covington, former chief justice of the District Supreme Court.

Seal said he would forward the proposed amendments to the Budget Bureau for early submission to Congress.

D.C. to Get 50% Of Roosevelt Birthday Funds

Institutions Here Also To Receive Half of 'March of Dimes'

Fifty per cent of the entire proceeds from all local President's Birthday events will be allocated to District institutions, it was announced yesterday by co-chairmen George E. Allen and Commissioner Hazen.

"Not only will the District receive half of the funds from the dances, the horse show and other sporting events, but it also receives half of the fund obtained from the 'March of Dimes' sent in from the District," Hazen said.

The full 50 per cent will be kept here to use in the battle against infantile paralysis, Hazen declared.

Allen has charge of the "March of Dimes." There are 49 departments arranged, one for each of the 48 States and one for the District.

Tickets for the dances, which will be held in seven local hotels, are $2.50 each and one ticket admits to any or all of the hotels. Corporation Counsel Seal, in charge of the ticket committee, said the tickets may be obtained at the hotels, at all Peoples' Drug Stores, American Automobile Association, Keystone Automobile Association and all Government departments. In addition all firemen and policemen will have tickets for sale.

Colored Youth Objectives Are Outlined

Reported Feature Closing Sessions Of Conference

Adoption of objectives for the finer adjustment of members of the colored race to the trunk lines of American national life marked the closing sessions of the second national conference on the problems of the Negro and Negro Youth, which was called by Aubrey Williams, administrator of the National Youth Administration.

The conference was described by Williams as "a part of the life blood of the democratic process, a part of the battle to save and strengthen democracy, to make it work in such a way that all cities will not only enjoy and exercise intelligently the rights and privileges of political participation in the solution of their common problems, but also will realize their full stature as workers in an economy which permits every man and woman, every young person, to use to the best advantage his own strength and talent in creation of a national well-being for all the people."

10 Per Cent of Population

Conference reports showed that colored people represent 9.9 per cent of the national population, while colored youth represent 10.97 per cent of the group between 15 and 24 years. Out of a total employment of 591,000 youths in the student aid and works program of the NYA, 63,600 were colored. There were 113 colored colleges which participated in this program last year. Colored graduate students received $100,000 from a special fund.

The average family income of all school, college and graduate colored students was shown as $405. The average family income of the high school students was $366, as compared with an average of $563 for all recipients of aid.

In the national health program of 1938, it was shown that colored family groups in 94,421 homes cleaned, repaired and beautified their homes. Attendance of colored men and women on health lectures totaled 1,250,370. Health sermons were delivered to more than 350,000 church members. Men, women and children receiving physical examinations under governmental direction numbered 98,702. Field service for the health work included 15 States and 30 localities. The State of Maryland and Baltimore were commended for extension of full-time health service and for health contests.

Many Attend Exhibits

Conference delegates and visitors were attracted to exhibits of reports and articles published by the office of education of the Interior Department, especially surveys of secondary education for colored people, a survey of teacher education, and a survey of vocational education and guidance. Other bulletins and publications showed the availability of educational facilities to colored boys and girls in rural communities, the background of colored college students and organization meetings and conferences held under a field service administration.

With reference to housing, the conference indorsed the Wagner-Ellenbogen bill, and recommended that it be amended to include a housing commission with colored membership. Protection of colored skilled and unskilled labor on housing projects, through "nondiscrimination clauses" in contracts let, was indorsed, as were all measures leading to active participation of colored men and women in administration of housing projects and on technical staffs.

An evaluation of social security programs, as colored citizens are affected, disclosed a prevalent impression that colored men and women have been displaced from jobs because of social security legislation. Liberalization of policies of labor unions was noted by the conference as a favorable sign, and legislation designed to forbid racial discrimination in unions enjoying protection of various State labor relations acts was favored.

Restrictions Stressed.

Absence of provisions against racial and sectional differentials in the matter of wages and work conditions was deplored, although the wage and hour administration was absolved of any intention to discriminate up to the present time. A minimum wage for Federal and District of Columbia employes of $1,500 was indorsed.

Robert R. Taylor, director of the Michigan Boulevard Apartments, Chicago, called attention of the conference to restrictive covenants operating against the purchase of desirable properties by colored people. Public policy, interpreted by the courts in the past as not sufficiently strong to obviate these covenants, he indicated as shifting with sentiment in opposition to such covenants which, he said, are responsible for the ghetto life, squalid conditions within the home, low public health rates, and serious social dangers involved in colored life in the urban areas.

Shotgun Bandit Suspect Caught

A 21-year-old Arlington, Va., youth, suspected of being the shotgun bandit who perpetrated a series of holdups in Washington and two in Arlington, was being returned from New York last night by Detective Sergt. Paul Ambrose.

The youth, whose father was killed in an accident here three years ago, was sought in Arlington, police said, soon after the shotgun bandit lost his weapon to two employes of the Pershing Pharmacy in Lyon Park, Va. He had left his home but was located in New York on a tip.

Occoquan Inmate Slashes Wrists

William Dwyer, inmate at the Occoquan Workhouse, was in critical condition last night after slashing his wrists with a razor in his cell.

Dwyer, serving a sentence of 120 days on a charge of vagrancy, was sentenced November 30.

Supt. Ray Huff said he would order an investigation to determine how Dwyer obtained the razor.

Seal Sales Fail To Meet Need

Although an all-time record for Washington in the sale of Christmas seals was revealed this season, the Tuberculosis Association still is $14,000 short of the amount necessary for the year's budget, Dr. James C. Townsend, president of the organizaztion, announced yesterday.

Approximately 40,000 persons have responded in the campaign, but there still are many thousands to whom seals were sent, but who have not been heard from, he said. "Tuberculosis germs never take a holiday, and we shall need the cooperation of all our friends to make this a winning fight," the association president concluded.

Senate to Act Today on House WPA Slash

Bankhead Declares 150-Million Cut Is Absolute 'Minimum'

With "economy" advocates victorious in the House, the battle over the $725,000,000 WPA deficiency bill will be taken up tomorrow morning in an Appropriations sub-committee of the Senate.

Senator Adams, of Colorado, chairman of the sub-committee, and other Senators predicted the Senate would retain the $150,000,000 slash inflicted by the House on President Roosevelt's request for an $875,000,000 appropriation to cary WPA from February 7 to end of the fiscal year.

Before the bill is finally enacted, it may be further amended by proposals Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, said he would introduce tomorrow. These proposals, embodied in the report of the Commitee on Unemployment and Relief, are designed to "take politics out of relief" by forbiding WPA administrative employes to engage in political activity and by forbidding any one to offer relief jobs—or to threaten to take relief jobs away—on political grounds.

Scoffs at Rebuff Idea

In the House bill, it is already provided that none of the money can be used to pay salaries or benefits to persons who try to influence votes of PWA workers. No elections are scheduled for the five-month period ending July 1, however.

Although the overwhelming House vote in favor of the $150,000,000 cut has been described in many quarters as a rebuff to President Roosevelt, Speaker Bankhead and Majority Leader Rayburn both scoffed at such an interpretation yesterday.

"The question was simply how much the individual members believed necessary to take care of the unemployed," said Bankhead. "The vote cannot be interpreted as a rebuff."

Asked what he would do in case the Senate slashes the appropriation still further, Bankhead replied, "So far as I am concerned, the amount passed by the House is a minimum."

House Tackles Deficiency Items

First legislation to be tackled by the House this week will be four emergency deficiency items which will come up before an appropriations sub-committee tomorrow.

Amounting to more than $17,000,000, they include $3,500,000 for a building for the Census Bureau in Washington. Requests totaling $5,029,000 come from the Wage-Hour Administration and the Children's Bureau for administrative expenses.

Forest fire protection and other forest work made necessary by the New England hurricane has resulted in an emergency request for $5,700,000 and the threat of certain insect pests brings before the committee a bill to supply $3,300,000.

Hearings on the Treasury appropriation for 1940 will begin Tuesday with Secretary Morgenthau scheduled as first witness.

On the other side of the Capitol, the full Senate Judiciary Committee will meet tomorrow to pass upon the nominations of Felix Frankfurter to the Supreme Court and Frank Murphy as Attorney General. It is expected both appointments will be speedily approved.

The Commerce Committee will vote Wednesday on the appointment of Harry Hopkins as Secretary of Commerce. He, too, is believed certain of indorsement.

The monopoly investigating committee will resume its study of patents tomorrow.

In commenting on prospects of restoration of the original amount to the WPA appropriation bill, Senator Mead (Democrat), of New York, said that "New York projects and personnel will be cut upwards of 20 per cent if this reduction is sustained by the Senate. Personally, I am hopeful that the budget estimate (of $875,000,000) will be recognized and approved by the Upper House."

Masaryk Blames Terror in Palestine on Nazis; Urges Jews to Save Holy Land From Czech Fate

Zion

in other lands to purchase large quantities of German-made goods is tantamount to placing a premium upon brutality and rewarding the most inhuman oppressors of our people," he said.

Dr. Stephen S. Wise, of New York, chairman of the executive committee of the United Palestine Appeal, emphasized the necessity of permitting refugees from the Reich to leave with a maximum amount of their property and savings.

Reporting that 55,000 Jews have entered Palestine in the last two and a half years, Joseph Baratz, founder of the oldest co-operative settlement there, blamed Nazi and Fascist propaganda for the terrorism.

Blames Terror on Nazis

"Many of the Arabs would live peacefully with the Jews," he said, "if it were not for the terror which is being supported by Nazis and Fascists."

Dr. Israel Goldstein, president of the Jewish National Fund, stressed the availability of great stretches of land in Palestine waiting to be tilled and developed and warned against the attitude "that we must wait with our investments in Palestine until the political situation becomes clarified."

"The Jews of Germany, Poland, Rumania, Hungary, etc., cannot wait," he asserted. "Scores of thousands of them are willing, nay clamorous, to invest their lives and the lives of their children in Eretz Israel. The least that we can do is to give them their start, a roof over their heads, ground under their feet and the chance to earn their livelihood. That is what the United Palestine Appeal is for."

Points to Southern Palestine

Robert M. Bernstein, vice chairman of the Allied Jewish Appeal of Philadelphia, who presided at last night's session, pointed out that Southern Palestine now is populated by a scant 5,000 nomads, though in Roman times it was the home of 300,000 people.

Visiting the United States for the first time in "seven or eight years, I think it's been," Masaryk last night made the first broadcast in a series which he will deliver in the next three months to promote solution of the Jewish refugee problem.

He will speak again today at a Mayflower luncheon to be attended by conference delegates, whose total number is estimated at 1,500. At 3 p. m. they will hear Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson, and the principal speaker at tonight's banquet will be Representative Adolph Sabath, of Illinois, dean of the House.

Lashes Out at Hitler

Masaryk, who resigned as Czecho-Slovak minister to London after the Munich agreement, lashed out unmercifully against the Hitler regime.

"What has happened to us should, it must, be a lesson to you all," he declared. "We treated our German minorities well, very well. We made mistakes and, believe me, it is the prerogative of democracy to acknowledge and correct mistakes.

"A dictator is not allowed to make mistakes. Hence, when he makes one or more he is not allowed to acknowledge it or correct it. If you would compare the treatment allotted to our Germans by my father with the treatment which Henlein and company are dishing out to the Jews and anti-totalitarian citizens of Sudetenland, it is as heaven compared to hell!"

Calls "Peace" Vain

The "peace" of Munich was in vain, he said.

"So far not one thing has happened since Munich which would justify any optimism," he said. "Quite the contrary. Mr. Chamberlain is returning from Rome. Bringing what?—I am wondering."

Masaryk, who a few hours earlier had greeted Czechó-Slovak Minister Vladimir Hurban, said his people were "ready to die for an ideal" but "they were betrayed and their ideals were trampled underfoot by the heavy totalitarian goose-stepping boots."

He said he came here to plead the cause of Palestine "because I am convinced that one of the most important pillars of hope in these dark hours is the idea of the national home, a homeland for defenseless people who for centuries were never masters of their own destiny."

Sees Cause for Pride

"In Palestine," he said, "the Jews threw off the yoke of the oppressor. Recently confronted with terror and violence, they stood up for their rights. In my humble estimation the Jews have not interfered with the economic and cultural development of other nationalities in Palestine. They have not interfered with the Arabs, for instance. Their success in making Palestine a prosperous and cultured country has been astounding.

"When I think of Toscanini directing a Palestine Orchestra in Tel Aviv I am very proud."

Recalling that his father visited Palestine and was deeply impressed by what he saw, Masaryk said that land must be "safeguarded as a moral beacon of hope, a ray of light in the wilderness and darkness in which millions of Jews are groping pathetically and trying to save themselves from destruction or worse than destruction."

"I am absolutely convinced," he asserted, "that the problem can be solved to the satisfaction of all concerned if a firm and fair stand is maintained by Great Britain and America and if other uninvited 'butters-in' will just keep their hands off. They wish to undermine the democracy which has taken root in Palestine. They do not give a damn about the Arabs."

Before his address, he laughingly pointed out that for years he had been yearning for "another whiff of America." He has visited his American-born mother's three sisters in New York and plans to renew acquaintance with many friends in the United States.

He said he expects to return in April to his dogs and books in England, where he served nearly 15 years as minister and which is now his temporary home. He said, however, that he had no idea of giving up his Czech citizenship.

Masaryk is tall, thin haired and vigorous. His eyes are brown, his English as correct as an Oxonian's. He is unmarried.

Rabbits Also on Air

He revealed that the Czecho-Slovakian government, which a few months ago ordered the removal of pictures from the elder Masaryk and former President Benes on display in its legations, officials apologized to him after rescinding the order.

The addresses of Drs. Silver, Wise and Goldstein were broadcast on a separate program.

Palestine stands ready to receive 100,000 German Jews this year, said Rabbi Silver, adding that "Jewish leadership should make it unmistakably clear to all the governments of Europe that it is impossible to evacuate 6,000,000 Jews, that there are no countries prepared to receive them, no colonies available for their settlement and no financial means at hand for effectuating such a program even if it were feasible.

He urged the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees, all friendly nations and public opinion to concentrate on gradual settlement of Palestine, explaining that the country is already equipped to receive a mass immigration.

Dr. Goldstein stressed the importance of speedy, certain action in sending settlers to the Holy Land. "The lesson from the past is buy more land, build more homes and settle more families in Eretz Israel," he declared.

Among those who sent messages to the conference were Dr. Chaim Weizmann, president of the Jewish Agency for Palestine; Prof. Albert Einstein, who is honorary chairman of the United Palestine Appeal; Menahem Ussishkin, president of the Jewish National Fund, and Mrs. Rose Jacobs, American member of the executive committee, Jewish Agency for Palestine.

School Champ Fells Bandit After Holdup

Tech High Athlete Catches Bandit After Three Blocks' Chase

A 17-year-old McKinley Technical High School athlete, after a 3-block chase, last night captured the robber who held up his father's liquor store.

In face of the thug's threat to shoot, the youth lashed out with an uppercut to the jaw—then discovered that the holdup man's gun was actually a monkey wrench.

But it didn't look like a monkey wrench when the bandit stepped into the Pure Wine and Liquor Store, Seventh street and New York avenue northwest, and, hand menacingly in pocket, demanded that the proprietor's son, Nick Mantzouris, hand over the day's receipts.

Nick handed over two $5 and several $1 bills.

The bandit demanded more, but Nick insisted that was all there was. At that moment, Nick's sister, Bessie, 14, stepped into the store and the man, after threatening her also, darted out into the street.

Sister Gives Chase

Bessie gave chase immediately. Nick first called to his father, George, 49, who had been in the back and had not heard the thief, and joined in the pursuit.

Nick caught up with the culprit after three blocks. Out of breath, the thief again attempted to scare off Nick with the "gun," but the latter waded in and knocked the man down.

When the man tried to get up, Nick hit him again, this time knocking him out. Nick dragged him back to the store, where he called police. In the man's pocket he found a wrench.

Nick, former junior high school wrestling champion, later revealed there was $150 in the cash register, and $400 more in the store at the time.

At Second Precinct Station the holdup man was not immediately charged.

Angry Citizens Demand End to Dog Sniping

Anacostia Delegation Storms Office of Assistant Counsel

Fifteen irate citizens from Anacostia yesterday stormed the office of Assistant Corporation Counsel Milton Korman, demanding "that something be done" about the unidentified sniper who killed a neighborhood dog and wounded another within four days.

To Korman and Assistant District Attorney Stephen Haycock, the delegation complained that Fritz, a neighborhood German shepherd dog, was shot to death Tuesday while playing with a group of children in the rear of the 1300 block Valley street southeast.

Eight-year-old Leo Mead, 132 Valley street, told Korman and Haycock he was playing in a tree about 7 feet beyond Fritz's head when he heard a shot. The dog howled and writhed in pain. Other children, Billy Barrett, 4, of 220 block Montview street southeast, and Francis Flaherty, also 4, were playing nearby when the dog was killed, it was said at the hearing.

Fritz died the next day.

Friday, a dog owned by Gordon B. Green, 1331 Forty-fourth place southeast, was wounded in the leg by a mysterious sniper. Green's dog was not seriously hurt.

D. C. Lawyer Falls 8 Floors To His Death

Alan Garner, 47, Washington patent attorney, was killed yesterday in a plunge from the eighth-story window of the hotel in St. Louis where he was preparing a case.

Mr. Garner, who had offices in the National Press Building, registered in the hotel last Monday and told employes he had suffered from a nervous breakdown several months ago.

His body, carrying with it a shower of glass from the hotel window, landed on the sidewalk of Twelfth street, one of the city's busiest thoroughfares. It narrowly missed the hotel marquee.

Mr. Garner was born in Falls Church, Va., April 3, 1890, and educated in the public schools there, Western High School and George Washington University Law School, where he was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity. He served in the World War as a captain of cavalry and was an instructor at Fort Sill, Okla.

Survivors are his wife, Mrs. Dorothy S. Garner, of 117 Columbia street, Falls Church, where he also made his residence; two sons, Alan S. Garner, 13, and David M. Garner, 11; a brother, Robert Garner, of Arlington, and two sisters, Mrs. Katherine Davis, of Falls Church, and Mrs. Earl Crooker, of New York City.

VILLANOVA BOXERS BEAT CARDS, 4½-3½

Bucky Harris

By Shirley Povich

Chapter Eight

A PERTURBED YOUNG MAN WAS Bucky Harris early in the winter of 1923-24. Clark Griffith had hinted that Eddie Collins, of the White Sox, was to be the new Washington manager and he had asked Harris to shift to third base. Bucky agreed, but with misgivings.

At second base Harris had found his niche in the big leagues. In the minors he had been a flop at shortstop and in his few trials at third base he didn't like the job. But if Collins were coming to the Nats as manager it would be as a playing manager and Bucky knew there was not room for both at second base. In three years with Washington, Harris had become recognized as a good second baseman. But Eddie Collins was the best.

Bucky Harris as he appeared in 1924 when named manager of the Nats.

Contributing, too, to his worries was the fact that Donie Bush had been fired as the Washington manager. Bush and Harris had been close friends. In fact, they had been roommates. Harris liked to play for Bush, but he knew little of Collins' personality. And with the threat of Collins taking over his second base job also looming, Bucky was a sorely beset fellow when he returned to his Pittston, Pa., home. He was a bit piqued at Griffith, too. He reasoned that the Nats owner had no right to expect him to play third base after he had made good at second. It was in such a frame of mind that Bucky suddenly decided to resume professional basketball in the off-season.

Griffith was opposed to off-season basketball for Harris, particularly in the tough professional league. He had warned Bucky against it, declaring that no baseball player could be at his best unless he rested during the winter. When Harris signed his contracts with Griffith for 1922 and 1923, Griffith inserted clauses forbidding Bucky to play pro basketball.

BUT HARRIS HAD ALREADY SIGNED for the 1924 season, at a salary of $7,000 a year. And no mention had been made by Griffith of the customary basketball ban. The Nats' owner carelessly forgot to stipulate it in the new contract. Harris knew that it was merely an oversight, but he managed to square himself with his conscience. When the Glens Falls team of the New York State Pro League offered him $500 a month to play basketball, he took it. It was so much found in the off-season, and Bucky could use the added income.

For half the season Bucky played in the New York State League and was getting away with his secret. No word reached Griffith, and Harris felt himself secure. Griffith might never have been the wiser save for an unhappy encounter in Washngton on New Year's Eve between the two.

Arriving in Washington to attend a New Year's party given by his bride-to-be, Elizabeth Sutherland, daughter of the Alien Property Custodian, Bucky was slightly embarrassed. The evening before, in a basketball game at Utica, N. Y., he had received a black eye—the common variety of shiner. Twenty-four hours later, it was still what is known as "a beaut." He was prepared for the jibes of his friends, but he was most certainly not prepared to encounter Clark Griffith.

But that is what happened. As Harris stepped into an elevator in the Wardman Park Hotel, he realized that the only other passenger was the Nats' owner. Bucky gulped, managed a feeble "Hello, Mr. Griffith."

Griffith took one look at Harris' black eye. He didn't return the greeting. He said, severely:

"Bucky, you've been playing basketball."

"Yes sir," said Harris abjectly. "But it wasn't in my contract."

GRIFFITH FUMED, ORDERED HARRIS to quit basketball or quit the Washington club. Then he was struck by another idea. He told Bucky he looked underweight and drawn and ordered him to Florida for a vacation. He told Harris he was arranging tickets for a train to leave two days later. And to insure that Bucky would be resting in the South, he forbade him to take his golf clubs.

To Harris' surprise when he reported at Griffith's office for his transportation, the Nats' owner told him that Mike Martin, the team's trainer, would accompany him to Florida as added insurance that he would not be footloose. Bucky couldn't understand the arrangement. He didn't know why he was being treated like a prima donna.

That winter of 1923-24 set something of a record for managerial speculation in Washington. Griffith was close-mouthed and gave no hint of who would be Donie Bush's successor. First reports had it that Kid Gleason, of the White Sox, would get the job. Eddie Collins' name was bandied bout in connection with the post, and so was the name of Jack Barry, another former member of Connie Mack's famed $100,000 infield.

Griffith's refusal to give any indication of his choice kept Washington baseball writers in a perpetual dither. Each day new names were advanced and with spring training less than a month away, no manager had, as yet, been named.

Harris, in Florida, was of course vitally interested. His chief hope was that it would not be Collins. He wanted no interference with his second base job. He confided to Martin that Kid Gleason was his personal choice. He liked the grizzled oldtimer and thought Gleason would make the Nats a splendid manager.

Unbeknown to himself, Harris was on the right track. Gleason was getting high consideration from Griffith. But Harris found that out only under the strangest circumstances. He learned that Gleason was being considered at the same time that he learned Griffith was offering the job to himself—Bucky Harris.

Never in his life was Bucky Harris closer to a swoon than that day at Tampa, Fla., when he opened a special delivery letter from Griffith and read the incredible contents. The Nats' owner was asking him if he would care to manage the Washington club in 1924.

"I think you can do a good job for us as manager, Bucky," Griffith wrote. "If you want the job, it's yours. But I must know quickly. I have told Kid Gleason that I will give him my final answer on Saturday. If you want the job, call me on long-distance telephone when you get this letter."

IT WAS FRIDAY NIGHT. HARRIS must call quickly. But he was still in a daze. He had never entertained any notions of being the Washington manager. In later years, he might manage a club, but now he was only 27. Fellows that young didn't get big-league managerial jobs. But now he began to understand Griffith. He knew now why the Nats' owner had ordered Trainer Mike Martin to accompany him South. He wanted Harris under the eye of the Washington club. Griffith had apparently been mulling the appointment of Bucky all winter.

Harris roused himself from his reveries and rushed to Martin with the news. Then he rushed to a phone, asked the operator to connect him with Griffith in Washington.

"Hello, Mr. Griffith," he shouted, "I want that job."

The telephone connection was poor. Griffith apparently couldn't hear him. "What's that?" he asked.

"I want that job, Mr. Griffith. Thanks."

"You've got to let me know tonight, Bucky," said Griffith. "I can't wait any longer."

Harris was frantic. He could hear Griffith plainly, but apparently the Nats' owner could not hear him. The job was his for the taking, but he couldn't make himself understood.

Mr. Griffith, I want that job," yelled Bucky into the phone for the 'steenth time.

It was useless. In dismay, Bucky heard Griffith say, "I can't wait all night for your answer," and hung up.

Then Bucky thought of the bright idea of accepting the job by telegram. He wired: "I'll take that job and win Washington's first pennant. (signed) Manager Bucky Harris."

(Another Bucky Harris article will appear tomorrow.)

Stratton's Plan to Pitch Okayed by Club

MONTY STRATTON

Artificial Leg Will Aid Injured Hurler In His 'Comeback'

Copyright, 1939, by the United Press.

Chicago, Jan 14.—The gunshot that cost Pitcher Monty Stratton his right leg may have marked the start of baseball's noblest experiment.

Chicago White Sox officials revealed today that the lanky right-hander will be given a chance to pitch again if he wants to. And Monty wants to pitch again. He said so himself shortly after his right leg was amputated at the knee following a hunting accident six weeks ago in Texas.

While the rest of the baseball world was mourning the tragedy that seemingly ended Stratton's brilliant pitching career, Monty propped himself up in his bed and announced:

Will Get Chance

"I'll pitch again. I'll do it with the help of an artificial leg."

This utterance was no mere gesture. Monty meant every word. And his bosses know it.

"Stratton definitely will be given a chance to pitch again," Vice President Harry Grabiner said. "He's got the courage and the determination, and I don't see why we shouldn't give him the chance."

"There has to be a first time in everything," Grabiner added. "And there's no reason why Stratton can't be the first man to pitch with an artificial leg. Just when he would be able to do it is difficult to say. There are so many things to take into consideration, first and foremost of which is Monty's own welfare."

Grabiner said that if Stratton is recovered sufficiently from the amputation the ill-starred hurler will go to the White Sox spring training camp at Pasadena, Calif., next month.

Will Act as Coach

Stratton, who has been assured a lifetime job with the White Sox, will get a chance to work out with his teammates and be on the field as a coach.

Grabiner pointed out that since Stratton is a righthander, his left leg is the natural pivot leg in going through the actual delivery of a pitch.

"You see," he demonstrated, "he could rear back on the artificial leg and then when he came forward to throw the ball, his weight would be on the left leg—the one he pivots with. Yes, if Monty is so determined, I think he can do it. He's only 25 and has a lot of years ahead of him. He may not be able to pitch this year, but only time will tell."

Semipros to Organize

Chicago, Jan. 14 (U.P.).—President Ray Dumont of the National Semi-pro Baseball Congress announced today that plans for organizing upward of 10,000 new sandlot clubs this year in connection with baseball's 100th anniversary will be revealed at the semipro commissioners' annual meeting here January 20.

G.U. Defeats West Va. by 37-31 Count

Rivals Tied, 14-14, At Half; Matuza and Murphy Sink Shots That Assure Victory

By the Associated Press.

Morgantown, W. Va., Jan. 14.—Georgetown University's basketball team, pushed to the limit by a fighting West Virginia University squad, maintained their scorching pace tonight by downing the Mountaineers, 37-31, in an Eastern Intercollegiate Conference game.

The count was tied at 14-all at the end of a ding-dong first half, in which neither team could score more than a three-point advantage.

Hoyas Take Lead

The Hoyas took the lead midway in the second half and withstood all attacks from then on.

Led by Capt. Harry Lothes and Center Homer Brooks, the Mountaineers had the advantage more than half the time. An eleventh-hour push brought them to within 2 points of a tie, but successive field goals by Matuza, substitute Hoya guard, and Murphy, lanky forward, gave the Hoyas a safe lead again.

Lothes and Brooks, of the Mountaineers, and Schmitt, of Georgetown, shared scoring honors with 12 points each. Murphy had 10.

The victory was Georgetown's second in the conference. The Mountaineers have dropped two conference games.

Carnival 'Queen' To Wed Michigan Girl Editor

Ann Arbor, Mich., Jan. 14.—Husky Jack Brennan, gridiron and wrestling hero who astonished everyone but "the sinister six" when he was chosen "Queen" of the University of Michigan ice carnival, came up with another surprise tonight.

The 6-foot-1 200-pound-plus guard announced his engagement to Dorothea Staebler, of Ann Arbor, women's editor of the Michigan Daily, student newspaper.

"That doesn't apply to Dorothea," he replied hastily when asked about his now famous remark of two years ago that "four out of five women are beautiful and the fifth comes to Michigan."

The campus horseplay in choosing a male queen was said to be part of a student movement to end the festival and carnival queen business.

N.Y.U. Quintet Tops St. John's

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 14.—New York University used its weight, height, skill and team play to win from St. John's here this evening, the score being 47 to 15.

Throughout the game, the visitors took things easily, and, with the exception of Art Resnick, big left forward, no one went out in front in the matter of scoring. Resnick, however, playing a calm and steady game, tossed six field goals and two from the line in the first half to score 14 points and easily led the field. Tripianisis took his place during the whole of the second half.

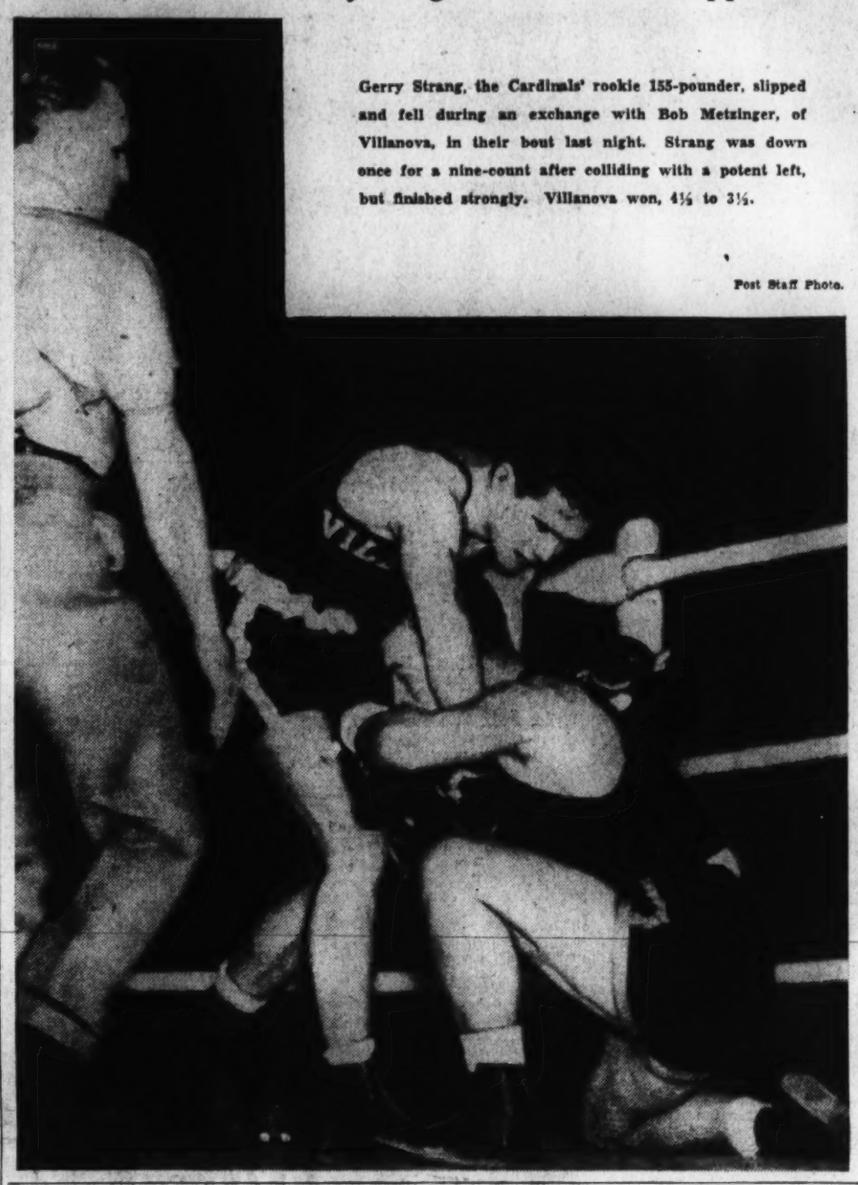
Catholic University Ringman Comes a Cropper



Gerry Strang, the Cardinals' rookie 155-pounder, slipped and fell during an exchange with Bob Metzinger, of Villanova, in their bout last night. Strang was down once for a nine-count after colliding with a potent left, but finished strongly. Villanova won, 4½ to 3½.

Horse Breaks Leg But Wins; Shot As Crowd Collects

Miami, Jan. 14 (U.P.).—Wrenace, making a last desperate lunge for the finish line, stepped into a hole today and fell heavily, breaking his leg.

It was his third victory in as many starts in the Florida season, and the crowd that lined up at the mutuel windows at Hialeah Park to collect on the 6-year-old gelding's win scarcely heard the sound of the shot that ended his life.

Oakland Open Lead Is Held By Dick Metz

By the Associated Press.

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 14.—Two par-shattering scores, changed the golfing picture here today as the field marched through the third round of the 72-hole, $5,000 Oakland Open Tournament.

Setting the pace at the three-quarters pole was handsome Dick Metz, of Chicago, with a 54-hole total of 204. His five under par 65 would have been the talk of the tournament had not E. J. (Dutch) Harrison, of Oak Park, Ill., barged in just ahead with a supergolfing effort of 64.

These two rounds set the stage for a new leader and a runner-up in the 18-hole drive down the home stretch tomorrow, at the end of which the winner will find a purse of $1,200 waiting.

Metz moved from a tie for fifth place into the leadership. Except for a bogey four on the seventeenth, when he hooked an iron shot, he would have equalled the competitive course record. Harrison tied it with seven birdies, through some deadeye putting, and a remarkable recovery from a trap on the eighteenth, despite one slip when he three-putted the tenth.

Harrison's feat moved him up from a tie for tenth yesterday into second position.

In third place was Ben Hogan, of White Plains, N. Y., with 206. Mark Fry, of Oakland, followed with 207, and Marvin (Bud) Ward, Olympia (Wash.) amateur, was in fifth spot at 208. Hogan and Fry carded 68s and Ward a 70 today.

Horton Smith, of Oak Park, Ill., leader at the halfway mark yesterday with 136, slipped badly to take a 73 and fall back into a sixth place tie with Jimmy Demaret, Houston, Tex., at 209.

Practically out of the running for first prize at the end of 54 holes were such noted performers as Sam Snead, West Virginia, who was the leading money winner of 1938; Harold McSpaden, of Winchester, Mass.; Ed Dudley, Philadelphia; John Revolta, Evanston, Ill., and Harry Cooper, Chisopee, Mass. Snead and McSpaden were bracketed at 212, Dudley at 215, Revolta at 217 and Cooper at 218. Snead, with a 74 today, experienced the most trouble, with missed putts and misdirected fairway shots.

Terp Mittmen Defeat Duke By 5-3 Count

Benny Alperstein, However, Is Upset; Morton K. O. Victor

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Durham, N. C., Jan. 14.—University of Maryland's ring team ran into a lot of surprises here tonight, but won a 5-3 decision in a dual meet with Duke University's Blue Devils in an action-crammed card in the Duke gymnasium.

Biggest surprise of the evening was the victory of Duke's captain, Chuck Kasik, aggressive lightweight, over Maryland's captain, Benny Alperstein, holder of the National Intercollegiate featherweight championship for two successive seasons. Kasik won Referee Russ Criswell's vote in a close scrap which Kasik forced all the way.

Steinback Kayoes Foe

Maryland picked up one point on a technical knockout, scored by Morton Steinback over Harry Sullivan in the 175-pound class, three by decisions, and two matches in the featherweight and 165-pound divisions—were called draws. Duke took decisions in the lightweight and unlimited classes.

The Kasik-Alperstein bout, headlining the program as the star match, was a sizzler from start to finish. Alperstein, who was fighting his first dual match at the new 135-pound weight, took a slight edge in the first round, when he landed the cleaner punches. The second round was even, with neither boy opening up to any extent, but Kasik came back in a strong finish to take the third stanza. The fight was close and everybody in the house knew it.

Comes Off Floor

Steinback's technical knockout triumph over Sullivan, who entered the ring for the first time tonight, was the sensational high light of the card. The Maryland boxer punished Sullivan badly with a long left hand in the first round. Sullivan opened the second round with a flurry of right hands, caught Steinback on the jaw and sent him to the canvas. But the Terp southpaw came off the floor to chill the Blue Devil a few seconds after 1 minute and 20 seconds of milling in the round.

Maryland had been heavily favored in each of the weights going into the match and the Duke showing was something of a surprise to the 800 fans who saw the show.

Durham, N. C., Jan. 14.—Summaries:
120 POUNDS—Dorr (Maryland) decisioned Prancher (Duke).
127 POUNDS—Bradley (Maryland) and Jordan (Duke) drew.
135 POUNDS—Kasik (Duke) decisioned Alperstein (Maryland).
145 POUNDS—Askin (Maryland) decisioned Little (Duke).
155 POUNDS—Cronin (Maryland) won by decision over Latimer (Duke).
165 POUNDS—Cox (Maryland) and Morel (Duke) drew.
175 POUNDS—Steinbach (Maryland) won by a technical knockout over Sullivan (Duke), 1:20 of second round.
HEAVYWEIGHT CLASS—Vincent (Duke) decisioned Reisin (Maryland).

2,500 See C. U. Lose to Strong Foe

Cards Promising; Mentzinger Beats C. U.'s Geary Strang In Feature Match

By Lewis F. Atchison.

The collegiate pillow-fighting season was ushered in last night at Brookland where a strong, well balanced Villanova squad knuckled its collective way to a 4½-3½ decision over Catholic University's representatives.

An audience of 2,500 fans saw matches which introduced to Washington the new intercollegiate duelling weapons—10-ounce gloves, and a rule making it mandatory that a knocked down fighter take a count of nine.

Easily the best engagement of the evening, from a spectator's viewpoint, was the 155-pound brawl between Geary Strang, Catholic University rookie, and Bob Mentzinger. Twice it threatened to end by a knockout, with first one and then the other hanging on, but it lasted the prescribed three rounds.

Coach Eddie LaFond sprung another surprise in the heavyweight division in the person of Julius Stanges, blond rookie, who gained a draw with 225-pound Ed Killian by outsmarting the big fellow. Stanges spotted the Connecticut colossus 30 pounds, and came within an ace of winning. Two judges voted draws, and the referee called it for the Cardinal standard bearer.

It was the old reliables, Bernstein, Stant and Jay Turner, all of whom were impressive, who scored the bulk of Catholic's points. Turner scored a technical knockout over inexperienced Willie Piscione in the light-heavyweight engagement, the only one of the entire card.

Each Forfeits Match

The teams opened hostilities with a point each, for Villanova elected to forfeit the 120-pound bout, and LaFond was unwilling to expose the clean-cut chin of his 145-pounder, Bill Gearon, to the sharp-shooting of Villanova's captain, Bill Duffy. The boys boxed exhibitions, however, and it was not difficult to see the coaches had acted wisely.

Bill Piscione, Villanova light-heavyweight, proved no match for Jay Turner, and kissed the canvas in the second round after taking a left hook on the jaw. Piscione had a crouch like a bloodhound's, and punched as though beating a bass drum.

Mike Ariano, a clever boxer, took the 127-pound class dispute from Tony Messuri, piling up his winning margin with solid right-hand shots to the body in the first and third rounds. Messuri, game and eager to fight, hurt Ariano in the second with a long right to the mid-section. He inflicted no serious damage, thereafter, however.

A strong rally in the final round gave Eddie Kirk, a strong lad with a spring-like right hook, the decision over Nestor Martinez, of Catholic, in the lightweight bout. Martinez held his own throughout the first two rounds. He clipped Kirk with a good jab and managed to land a few telling blows to the body and boxed nicely with his opponent. But it was all Kirk in the third and deciding session.

Assured of Tie

Villanova was assured of at least a tie for the evening when Bob Mentzinger rallied, after almost being knocked out in the first round, to win the decision from Geary Strang. It was a bruising setto, with Strang, making his debut in the ring, going down in the second round from a hard right to the jaw.

They slugged it out at arms-length throughout the third round and Mentzinger, boxing nicely and making every blow count, had a slight edge. Strang, however, almost landed a knockout punch as Mentzinger walked into him, but was too tired to follow up his advantage.

Fred Stant retarded Catholic's impending defeat, temporarily, by nosing out blond Johnny Nojanus in a rough 165-pound scuffle. The final round again decided the issue, with Stant going ahead by a shade as he landed frequently with a left hook to the body.

Nojanus rocked the C. U. boy with a hard right high on the forehead in the last round, but in the ensuing exchange was pulled off his feet by a left hook he forgot to duck.

127-POUND CLASS—Mike Ariano (Villanova) won by decision over Tony Messuri (C. U.), three rounds.
135-POUND CLASS—Eddie Kirk (Villanova) won by decision over Nestor Martinez (C. U.), three rounds.
145-POUND CLASS—Catholic U. forfeited to Villanova. Capt. Bill Duffy (Villanova) and William Gearon boxed exhibition, three rounds.
155-POUND CLASS—Bob Metzinger (Villanova) won by decision over Gerry Strang (C. U.), three rounds.
165-POUND CLASS—Frend Stant (C. U.) won by decision over John Nojanus (Villanova), three rounds.
175-POUND CLASS—Jay Turner (C. U.) scored technical knockout over Bill Piscione (Villanova), 1 minute 30 seconds of second round.
HEAVYWEIGHT CLASS—Julius Stanges (C. U.) and Ed Killian (Villanova) drew, three rounds.

Forward Scores All Team's Points

Duluth, Minn., Jan. 14 (AP).—When a basketball player rings up 18 points in a game, he usually rates some kind of a notice. That's what Eugene Paulson, forward of the Sts. Peter and Paul quintet did in a contest here today with the St. Margaret Mary cagers. Paulson's 18 tallies figured largely in his team's victory, for the Sts. Peter and Paul team won, 18 to 13.

Assorted Nats on Dotted Line

Veterans, However, A Bit Slow in Signing Contracts

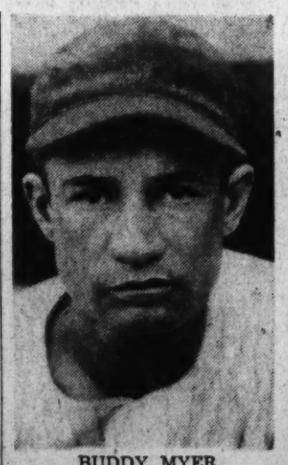
An assortment of 19 rookies and veterans are already under contract to the Washington club for 1939, Owner Clark Griffith announced yesterday in revealing a list of new signees.

Griffith's list, however, does not contain the names of several veteran members of the Nats, notably Second Baseman Buddy Myer, Outfielder Sam West, Catcher Rick Ferrell, and Pitchers Pete Appleton, Monte Weaver and Jimmy DeShong.

"They're a little slow, but they'll all sign," said the Nats' owner. This is one year when I won't have any contract troubles. There isn't a troublesome fellow in the lot, now that we're rid of Al Simmons."

Myer is the only infielder on the roster who has not yet accepted terms. Jimmy Wasdell's signed contract has been received and Shortstop Cecil Travis and Third Baseman Buddy Lewis accepted pay raises last week. Utility Infielder Ossie Bluege was the first Nat to sign a 1939 contract.

Among the list of signees announced by Griffith appeared the name of Morris Aderholt, a total stranger to Washington baseball writers. Griffith, himself, had to prod his memory to recall Aderholt. He was finally identified as the Wake Forest College second baseman of 1938 who had been signed to a Washington contract by Scout Joe Cambria.



BUDDY MYER

Buddy Myer Among Absentees From Nationals' List

Chief among the latest Nats to sign is Taft Wright, the club's leading hitter last season, who batted .348 for 100 games. The complete list of players now under contract is:

Bobby Estallela, slated to be a regular member of the Nats' outfield, is as yet unsigned, but his contract is believed en route from Cuba. All of the rookie pitchers with the club will report to training camp on February 1, a month in advance of the regulars.

Griffith revealed also yesterday that the Nats' No. 1 farm no longer will be located at Trenton. The Trenton franchise has been shifted to Springfield, Mass., in the Eastern League.

Cavalier, Syracuse Ring Teams Battle to 4-4 Tie

Bryant's K.O. Of Lavine Evens Match

Virginians Trail Until Last Fight; Three Knockouts Are Registered

By the Associated Press.

Syracuse, N. Y., Jan. 14 (AP).—An inexperienced Syracuse University boxing team sprang a surprise today by battling a favored University of Virginia outfit to a 4-4 tie.

With Virginia trailing, 4-3, as the last bout began, big Art Bryant, varsity football tackle, saved the day for the Southerners by blasting out a technical knockout over Syracuse's Bernard Lavine in the unlimited division. Referee Jimmy Crowley stopped the fight after 58 seconds of the second round.

The only other two knockouts were credited to Syracuse scrappers. Robert Hayes, novice orange boxer, stopped Roy Bowman in the second round of their 165-pound clash. In the 175-pound division, Americo Woyciesjes knocked out Fenton Somerville, after 54 seconds of the third.

Second Draw

It was the second successive year that the two teams had fought to a draw. Two previous meetings ended in victories for the Virginians.

The prize contest of the match from the viewpoint of the spectators was the hammer and tongs battle between Woyciesjes and Somerville. Americo sailed out throwing leather at the bell and Somerville elected to slug it out with him. The pair battled on even terms through most of the fight, with Americo finally putting his man away with a shower of lefts and rights. It was the first varsity scrap for both boys.

Bowman and Hayes were also making their debuts as college boxers. Referee Jimmy Crowley stopped the bout after Hayes had caught Bowman with a looping right to the neck which left the Virginia fighter helpless in the center of the ring.

120 pounds—Galley (Va.) defeated Tersiev, decision.
127 pounds—Duke (Syracuse) defeated Jacobs, decision.
135 pounds—Stauber (Syracuse) defeated Williams, decision.
145 pounds—Barksdale (Va.) defeated Palmoll, decision.
155 pounds—Southall (Va.) defeated Romaville, decision.
165 pounds—Hayes (Syracuse) defeated Bowman, technical knockout, 54 seconds of second round.
175 pounds—Woyciesjes (Syracuse) knocked out Somerville, 58 seconds of third round.
Unlimited—Bryan (Va.) defeated Lavine, technical knockout, 54 seconds of third round.
Referee—James Crowley.

Columbus U. Boxers Prime For Stiff Card

Explorers Hopeful Of Continued Success; Two Veterans Lost

Columbus University's Explorers are working out nightly in the Jewish Community Center's gymnasium while pointing for the most formidable boxing schedule in their history.

Boasting talent at every weight, Coach Jim McNamara is hopeful for a fine season for a team that has lost but three matches since organization in early 1931.

The Explorers are to open their schedule against "Pep" Justo's formidable DeSales College ringmen, of Toledo, Ohio, on the night of February 3; University of Kentucky invades Joe Turner's Arena, February 10; University of Tennessee visits February 18, and Louisiana Tech will be the attraction on the night of February 22.

But two veterans have been lost from last season, classy Georgie Marker having pulled out of the 120-pound class and Ray Morse having graduated from the featherweight division.

One of the brightest features of this year's Columbus U.'s 1939 setup is the return of sensational punching Bud Lazier to the 135-pound class. He was unable to compete due to an appendectomy in 1938.

Boxers currently working out with Columbus U. include: 120 pounds, Byron Irwin and George Appel; 126 pounds, Joe Byrnes; 135 pounds, Bud Lzaier; 147 pounds, Jim Willis and Bert Parod; 155 pounds, Dave Schlafer; 165 pounds, Bill Crum and Jack Minton; 175 pounds Lou Hayman and Jim Brown, and heavyweights, Andrew Keady and Jim King.

Schoenfeld Fifth In League Scoring

Statistics released by President John J. O'Brien of the American Basketball League News Bureau yesterday reveal that Mickey Schonfeld, sensational guard of Heurich Brewers, places fifth among the individual points scorers with 133 points. Phil Rabin, of Jersey Reds, continues leading the League with 171 points, and Moe Dubilier, of Wilkes-Barre, is second with 151 points.

Three of Washington's most popular courtmen, now pros, will be reunited Sunday afternoon when Heurich Brewers oppose Troy, N. Y., Haymakers in a 3 o'clock American Basketball League game at Heurich gymnasium.

Cliff Keyser, former Central High School athlete, joined the local Brewers in a workout last night. Waverly Wheeler and Fred (Knocky) Thomas, Keyser's former D. and H. teammates, already had been lined up for trials with the local professionals.

CAPITAL CAGEMEN:

Eddie Johnson Prototype of Famous Dad

Terps' Baseball and Cage Star Depends On Self for Name

This is the seventh in a series of sketches of college basketball players and coaches in the District area.

By Jack Munhall.

A mainstay of the baseball team, outstanding on the basketball court, president of the Student Government, highest obtainable undergraduate honor, and one of Maryland's most popular and respected young men—that's Eddie Johnson, son of Washington's immortal Big Train, who has not found it necessary to bask in the reflected glory of his famous father.

JOHNSON

Slender, blue-eyed with a creamy complexion, this blond 6-footer often startles old-time Washington ball fans who see in him all the physical characteristics they loved so well in Walter, when as a gangling youngster he first trod the mound at Griffith Stadium.

For Eddie is the prototype of the greatest right-hand pitcher baseball ever knew. His erect, defiant carriage is the same. He has the same broad shoulders, the same lean hips, the same long, loose arms with which Walter Johnson once propelled a baseball faster than the human eye could follow.

Nor does the resemblance between father and son stop with the physical comparison, for Eddie fortunately inherited a modest, friendly nature that already numbers him countless friends.

Eddie's athletic career bloomed on the sandlots with Kensington A. C., blossomed at Bethesda Chevy Chase High School where he starred in baseball and basketball and has matured at Maryland, where he long will be remembered for his effortless fielding about second base, his hard timely hitting and for his swift, untiring play on the court.

But as promising big league baseball timber as is Eddie Johnson the bleacher fans probably will never rise to their feet and cheer him as they did Walter when he would fan the side with the bases loaded. For Eddie is preparing for the life of a gentleman-farmer on his family's 525-acre estate at Germantown, Md.

Eddie's first pitching venture for Maryland was last season, his junior year, when he was called upon to face Michigan's slugging Wolverines in the eighth inning after they had knocked out two Terp hurlers. Not a polished moundsman, but equipped with blinding speed, average control and a fair curve, Eddie retired the Wolverines in order for the first time in the game. He also singled with the bases loaded to drive in Maryland's only run as it suffered it's first defeat of the season.

Eddie was one of Maryland's leading hitters in 1936 with an average of .412. He slipped under that figure last season but still was among the team's leaders with .366.

Heavyweights Meet May 25; Winner Due To Fight Louis

By the United Press.

New York, Jan. 14—Maxie Baer, former heavyweight champion, and young Lou Nova, the new "White Hope," were matched today for a 15-round contenders' battle at Yankee Stadium on May 25.

The winner is expected to get a title shot at Champion Joe Louis in September if Louis survives his fifth crown defense at Madison Square Garden on January 25 against Light Heavyweight Champion John Henry Lewis—and possibly two other scraps before September.

Promoter Jacobs said he would consider later what possible bouts might be made for Clarence (Red) Burman, of Baltimore, Jack Dempsey's protege who won an unpopular ten-round decision over Tommy Farr, of Wales, at the Garden last night. Also what might be done for Farr, who increased his popularity while losing his fifth straight American fight. Farr's manager, Joe Gould, intends asking the New York commission to reverse the decision, despite the fact that most metropolitan boxing writers thought it was fair.

Central Quintets Are Busy This Week

Five of the six teams in the Central Community Center Basketball League go into action this week, the feature of play being Wednesday's clash between league-leading Mount Vernon courtmen and The Hecht Co. A chance of the latter, now in third place, dropping Mount Vernon from its undefeated status will add to the interest surrounding the game. Tomorrow National Guards meet Railroad Retirement Board at Central, and Thursday Rural Electrification tangles with The Hecht Co.

Joey Archibald Hopes to Lift His Reputation

Meets Jerry Mazza At Arena Tomorrow Night in Feature

Joey Archibald, whose dream of world featherweight recognition was rudely interrupted by a sock on the jaw from Petey Scalzo, returns here tomorrow night to begin rebuilding a fistic reputation once considered beyond reproach. The Providence pogo-puncher faces Jerry Mazza, of Brooklyn, in the 10-round feature at Turner's Arena.

In Mazza cherubic Joey is meeting no Scalzo, no Leo Rodak, nor for that matter even a top-flight fisticuffer, but an ordinary preliminary boy who also entertains notions of ring greatness. On the well known papyrus Mazza doesn't figure to win from his better-known opponent, but it should be an interesting argument.

Archibald, still clinging to his regal robes as New York's nominee for the world title, will not trifle with the Brooklyn Italian. His every punch will be delivered with the hope of a knockout, and if Mazza goes the distance it should be a slam-bang, drag-out affair. Joey is on the spot. Scalzo has succeeded him in the hearts of the fans. Scalzo did nothing to cool the fans' enthusiasm by knocking out Lou Transparenti, of Baltimore two weeks ago, and it is no secret that Archibald hopes to emulate that feat.

Mazza arrived here late yesterday afternoon, and will wind up his training this afternoon at the Capital Boxing Club, indulging in a light workout. The boy is a former Golden Glove champion, and has several good victories to his credit although his reputation has not preceded him in this precinct.

The supporting card tomorrow includes Bob Wilson vs. El Brookman in the six-round semifinal, and Johnny Saverino vs. Joe Sole in another six. Wilson launched a comeback in auspicious fashion two weeks ago, flooring Frankie Willis twice and gaining a unanimous decision over that previously undefeated youngster. Brookman has been idle several weeks, but has a commedable preliminary record.

A quartet of comparative newcomers round out the bill of fare, with Billy Hatcher engaging Johnny Clifford, and Billy Pickeral boxing Billy Roseni in four-rounders.

Boyle to Coach Hoya Hockey Club

Georgetown University's newly organized hockey club held its first practice yesterday morning at the Chevy Chase Ice Palace. The club which hopes to gain the official recognition of the university will be coached by John Boyle, former Hoya football player.

Plans are being made to arrange a game between the Hilltoppers and the Chevy Chase Ice Palace team which will begin practice early this week. The Georgetowns also would like to book games with other local teams through Manager Boyle.

New Volley Ball League Starts Play

Organized volley ball appears on the local sports scene for the first time Tuesday, when two of the seven teams comprising the first division of the recently formed D. C. Volley Ball League swing into the first game of a gruelling 14-week schedule.

Teams holding franchises are Internal Revenue, Y. M. C. A., Brookland A. C., Interior, War Department Engineers, National Guard and Parkview Playgrounds. All games will be played in the Rock Creek, Y. M. C. A. and Interior gyms. Plans are underway for the formation of a division for college and women's teams. Maryland, Gallaudet, G. W. and Georgetown are already enrolled, while Wilson Teachers and American U. are expected to join.

First round play will be between Interior and the Engineers, starting at 5:30 at the Rock Creek gym. A double-header is planned for Wednesday.

'Tiny' Parker, Ump, To Enter Politics

Miami, Fla., Jan. 14 (AP).—George L. (Tiny) Parker, National League umpire, announced today he was requesting voluntary retirement to run for the Miami City Commission in the May election.

After 18 years of umpiring, three in the major leagues, Parker said he had decided to settle down. He wrote Ford Frick, president of the National League, asking to be placed on the voluntary retired list rather than resigning, however, to leave the way open for a possible return to baseball.

Bibber McCoy, Tommy O'Toole Top Week's Wrestling Program

Promoter Joe Turner, the gentleman responsible for the riotous activities at his Arena every Thursday night, has decided to change records for Thursday's mat show, and will play Bibber McCoy vs. Tommy O'Toole as the feature number.

That cracked and slightly scratchy Golden Terror piece that has been inspiring the citizens to fresh deeds of violence lately, will be put back in the rack until said citizens' tempers recede below the boiling point. After a sufficient rest it will be brought back, no doubt, possibly for a duet with another deserving villain.

This will be O'Toole's second featured appearance at the Arena, although the popular and muscular young Irishman has been used plentifully in preliminary engagements. The match also marks the return of top billing for McCoy, a privilege he formerly enjoyed on every trip to the District.

O'Toole tossed Jim Wright on last week's card, while McCoy flattened Nick Campofreda, and did such a job of it Nick will be idle three more weeks. McCoy has a long record in local rings, and is best remembered for a severe thrashing he gave Referee Benny Bortnick when Benny interfered too often with Bibber's rough stuff during a match with George Kondylis at Griffith Stadium.

O'Toole, incidentally, is demanding a match with the Terror, who thus far has thrown everybody tossed his way, with the lone exception of Joe Savoldi, who reversed the script.

Dogs

By George Berner

Feeding queries anent Christmas puppies poured in during the last few weeks and we have told about all we know about the subject. These new dog owners now want to know about worming, the prevention of distemper and rabies, and many are concerned about the care of bitches they say they bought on our recommendation. We have attempted to answer these by mail, but there are entirely too many now, so will try to do it here.

BERNER.

Every puppy should be inoculated for the prevention of distemper. This disease kills more dogs indirectly than all others and once a puppy has contracted it there isn't much to do. The great majority die from one of the complications which follow the disease. The treatment must be given by a veterinarian, and we prefer the so-called "three-shot method" where two shots of serum are given and then one of virus. We have found this method very effective, with our dogs, and haven't had a case of distemper in the past 12 years. The cost is nominal, and the chances of raising your dog increased a hundredfold.

Not Rabies Country

The inoculation for the prevention of rabies isn't nearly so effective and immunizes the dog for only a year, if at all. Rabies is seldom seen in this vicinity, and if your dog is kept at home, where he belongs he won't get it. On the whole, we do not recommend this treatment.

Worms seem to be bothering many of our readers (or their dogs), and though we went into this subject very thoroughly a few months ago, we cannot ignore the host of worm queries we have received recently. We have always held to the theory that all pups have worms, and we have seldom been wrong. It is a serious mistake for the novice to attempt to treat a young puppy for worms. The drugs used are very potent, capable of killing Mr. Pup as easily as the worms if given incorrectly or in overdoses. Take your pup to your vet, and let him worm it if it hasn't been wormed. It will cost you $1, or maybe $2, but the worms will be dead and the dog alive, instead of vice vera.

The bitch question is a tough one, not that it isn't comparatively easy to tell folks what to do but rather that it's plenty tough to write it so they'll print it. Number one question on this subject is "How will I know when she is in season?" The answer is easy. "Don't worry about that the signs are unmistakable." Some readers have been frightened by friends and others who insist that dogs will congregate from miles around, etc. This sort of thing while always exaggerated can be completely eliminated, and here's how.

When your bitch comes in season put her in the basement and keep her there. Take her for a walk morning and evening (or oftener) but always on a lead. Never under any circumstances allow her out without a lead. When you take her out of the house, carry her for a half block or so before allowing her to run and when you return, pick her up again about a half block from the house and carry her home. Never allow her to touch the ground in the immediate vicinity of your home. If she soils the floor of the basement make a solution of a tablespoonful of Pearson's creolin in a quart of water and spill a little on each spot. Follow this and you will have very little, if any, trouble with the other sex and no unwanted puppies.

The National Capital Kennel Club held its annual election last Monday night and when the smoke had cleared it was found that Frank Downey was re-elected president and will guide the club for another year. Congratulations Frank and thanks for the Christmas card. Mr. Mansfield, of Dalakay Kennels, is first vice president. Mr. Mansfield while comparatively new in local dog circles has been very active and will undoubtedly be very valuable as an officer of the club. Mr. Louck was elected second vice president, and Mrs. Jere Mackle was again selected to keep track of the club's funds, correspondence, etc., as secretary and treasurer.

Queries

Q.—You have repeatedly advised against spaying bitches. Is this because they are apt to get fat after spaying and if so, what can one do to prevent it?

A.—We are definitely against the altering of either dog or bitch and not only for the reason that they are prone to obesity. In many cases, the spaying of a bitch apparently has no effect on her at all but in a great many others it changes their characters, and dispositions as well as their appearance. A dog that has been altered should have more exercise and the diet should be watched closely and regulated or reduced to eliminate any tendency to put on weight.

Q.—What causes a dog to sit down and drag himself along with his front feet?

A.—If there is no local irritation we always regard this sleigh riding act as a definite sign of tapeworm.

Q.—Is it all right to feed a dog hot food. I have always thought not, but a friend of mine says hot meals are good for them.

A. These advising friends are getting in our hair. Never feed a dog food which is hot or cold. Room temperature is about right, but a young puppy's milk may be just a little warmer. Take the chill off anything you feed and never feed anything warmer than luke warm.

Q.—What is the best thing to feed very young puppies whose mother is incapable of nursing them?

A.—We have used plain cows milk to which just a little Karo syrup has been added. We have been told that this is entirely wrong but have raised several litters of bottle puppies in this manner. Feed them every two hours. At four weeks start them on a little scraped beef.

Q.—You have advised against feeding canned dog food. The other day while in a store, I saw a salesman for a dog concern eat some of it. Don't you think that must be pretty good food.

A.—Gosh no, some people have uncommonly strong stomachs and that poor devil probably thinks it is made the way the manufacturers say it is. You can gamble he has never seen it made.

The writer will answer all questions about dogs or pertaining to dogs either in this column or, if a stamp is inclosed by mail. Address him in care of The Washington Post.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The Chicago White Sox lead the league in at least one respect. They are the first club to publish and put into the mails a roster for 1939. A little brochure, tastefully made up with black printing on a field of pink, provides a grist of advance information on Jimmy Dykes' 32-man squad which will go into training at Pasadena on February 26.

POVICH

It is not a list of names to cause any great consternation among rival American League managers. A year ago, at this time, the White Sox were regarded as something of a pennant threat. They had made an impressive first-division finish in 1937; they owned the league's leading hitter, in Luke Appling and their pitching was seemingly on the improve.

But the White Sox of 1939 have little reason to anticipate a first-division finish. Manager Jimmy Dykes finds himself unequipped for any serious contention for the American League pennant. In a year the White Sox picture has changed vastly, and for much the worse.

Monty Stratton's name appears on the roster among the list of pitchers, but apparently that was only a sentimental gesture. There are reports that Stratton, victim of a hunting accident this winter, will attempt to pitch with an artificial leg. But Dykes is not disposed to regard that possibility seriously. Pitchers in extreme good health have their difficulties winning in the big leagues and a pitcher with an artificial leg would be, as Dykes knows, at the mercy of the bunters.

Gunshot Crippled the White Sox

The gunshot that crippled Stratton virtually crippled the White Sox as a team. He was one of the two pitchers on the club last season who won more games than they lost. Save for Stratton, who won 17 and lost only 7, the White Sox pitching staff could be classed as a pretty horrible crew. The veteran Ted Lyons, a year older now, could win only nine games in 1938, and Dykes' new pitching talent is not of the type to cause him to go into any mental handsprings of joy.

Best of the lot appears to be Arthur Herring, a 32-year-old rookie from St. Paul, who flopped with Detroit several years ago. Herring had an impressive record of 16 wins against only 6 defeats in the minors last season. Dykes' pitching appears to be as uncertain as that of the Athletics and the Nats, two teams whose hurlers appear to be a terrific drawback to whatever hopes those clubs have.

From the statistics, it appears that Dykes doesn't have an acceptable catcher on his squad since his release of 37-year-old Luke Sewell to the Dodgers for obvious reasons. George Rensa and Normal Schlueter, who shared the backstop duties with Sewell last season, batted .248 and .229, respectively, figures that are certainly not reassuring. The two rookie catchers Dykes is bringing up from the minors are one Kenneth Sylvestri, who batted .272 for St. Paul, and Mike Tresh, who last year was a .241 hitter.

His infield is so uncertain that Dykes has again put himself on the active list despite the fact that he is 41 years old and frankly confesses his inability to cover ground. A painful realization also to Dykes is the fact that Luke Appling last year did not fully recover from the broken ankle he received in a spring training game. Appling was woefully slow after returning to the White Sox line-up and in the field he was a distinct liability. His batting average dwindled, also, to a meager .303.

Jackie Hayes, who was Dykes' regular second baseman until a knee injury removed him from the line-up, was batting a respectable .328 and fielding in his usual clever style, but Hayes' knee has become a plague to the White Sox. It was his condition that prompted Dykes to trade Bozie Berger to the Red Sox for Eric McNair, another doubtful quantity.

Dykes Despaired of Joe Kuhel

The White Sox's prospects would be at their lowest ebb in many years were it not for the fact that a young man named Mervin Connors was picked up by the club late last season. Dykes had despaired of Joe Kuhel and his .267 batting average when Connors came along from St. Paul. Natively, a third baseman, Connors was shifted to first by Dykes and immediately began to establish himself as a whale of a prospect. He showed an ability to field, and, more important, he showed positive talents as a hitter.

In 24 games with the White Sox last season, 23-year-old Connors, a 6-foot 2-inch right-handed batter, pounded out six home runs, drove 12 tallies across the plate and finished with an average of .355. He will go to training camp as the White Sox's No. 1 first baseman, with Dykes in a mood to trade Kuhel if pitching talent can be acquired.

Also on the brighter side of the picture is Dykes' outfield situation. Gerald Walker, who was a colossal flop for the first four months of the season, finally went on a batting splurge to lift what had been an anemic average to .305 at the finish, and Rip Radcliff hit a praiseworthy .330. But best of all Dykes' outfielders was big Henry Steinbach, the rookie who was among the batting leaders all season with a .331 average.

But the White Sox, in no manner of rating, can be regarded as one of the strong clubs of the league. To compare them with the Yankees, the Tigers, the Red Sox and the Indians, would merely bring into bolder relief Jimmy Dykes' pitching weaknesses, his uncertain infielding, his minor league catching and only moderate batting power. Most certainly they smack of the second division.

Eight Major, 14 Class AA Teams Will Practice In Grapefruit State, Starting Next Month

By the Associated Press.

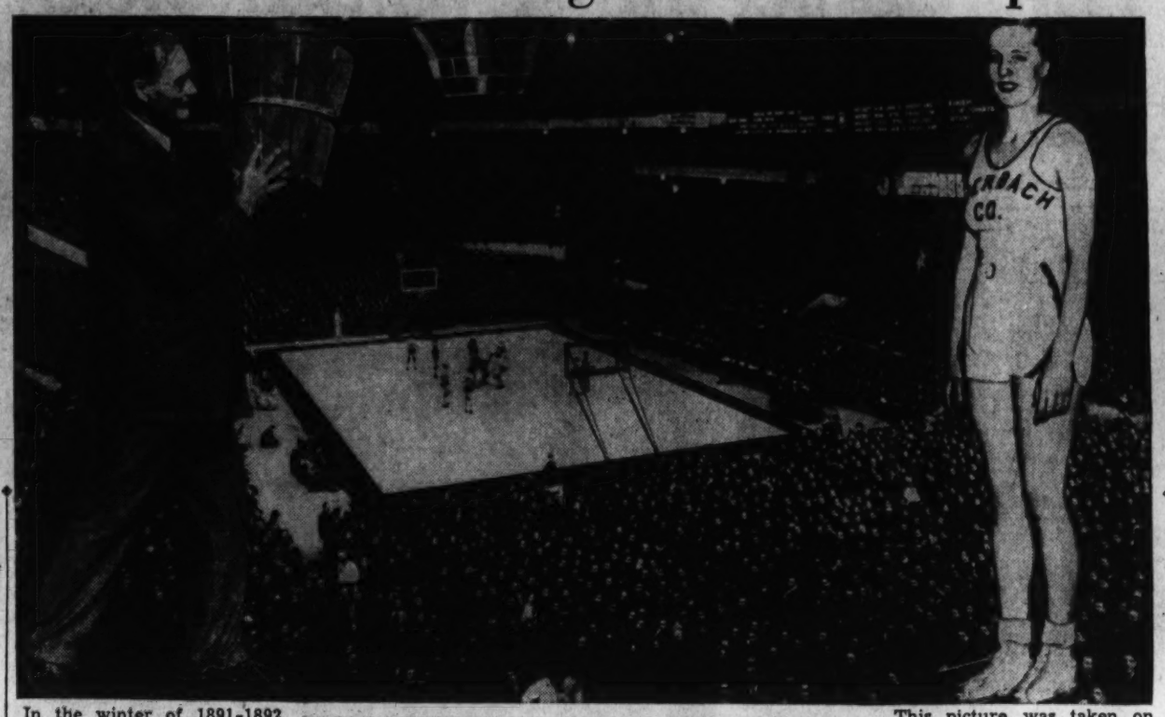
Tampa, Fla., Jan. 14.—It will be a month before managers start separating the sheep from the goats, but a score of Florida cities were ready today for spring chores of eight major and 14 Class AA baseball clubs.

About February 15 the first of the anxious rookies and the assured veterans will step out on grass carefully manicured to carpet texture and base paths of boiled-shirt smoothness.

That will stir the old urge in fans throughout the Nation, but the real preseason build-up will get going a couple of weeks later, when the boys start tangling in exhibition games. About 100 of these are scheduled for Florida this year and several score more will be run off for the delight of the provinces as the major teams journey slowly northward for the April season openers.

The "grapefruit league" remains only a sports writers' term this winter, but there is a movement afoot to put the majors' games on a more formal basis next year, with standings being kept and

Basketball in Pictorial Contrasts Down Through the Years as Sport Celebrates 47th Birthday



In the winter of 1891-1892 when Dr. James A. Naismith, professor at the University of Kansas, in Lawrence, Kan., invented the game of basketball he did not foresee that one day it would rival baseball in popularity. Now, the sport, which is almost as universal as tennis, is played by some 20,000,000 persons each year in many countries.

It was while a member of the staff of the Springfield (Mass.) Y. M. C. A. training school, where Dr. Naismith taught psychology, Bible study and boxing, that he invented the court game.

Two peach baskets, a soccer ball and a smooth floor were provided—and basketball was born. To guard against tackling which might cause injury, he thought of passing the ball. That went into the game, too, and today, with the exception of hockey, it is one of the fastest games on record.

At left — Basketball's First Team . . . So quietly and gradually did the game of basketball come into general use and popularity that no early effort was made to secure photographs of the setting of its beginning in the building at Springfield, Mass. A photograph of the first "five" shown above, is, as far as known, the only record of the men who participated in the pioneer days of the game. They are, front row: Finlay G. MacDonald, '93, St. Paul's Manse, Merigomish, Nova Scotia; the late William H. Davis, '92, and Lyman W. Archibald, '93, of Warren, Pa. Center—the late Frank Mahan, '93, and Dr. James Naismith, '91, professor emeritus, University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kans. Rear—the late John G. Thompson, '93; Eugene S. Libby, '92, Redlands, Calif.; Dr. Edwin P. Ruggles, '95, Dorchester, Mass.; William R. Chase, '93, New Bedford, Mass., and T. Duncan Patton, 92, first captain, of Toronto, Ontario. These nine men comprised the first "quintet," but the number was later reduced to five.

Attention is called to the fact that in the early days the gym outfit was black full-sleeve woolen jersey with long gray trousers. The ball-retriever on the ladder was replaced by boys in the gallery who removed the ball from the basket which had an opening—but no exit, because none of the players, in their enthusiasm, thought of knocking out the bottom.

Dukes' Belated Rally Routs Navy Five, 44-37

Bergman and Swindell, Subs, Score 22 Points to Sink Middies; Laney Keeps Tars in Running

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Jan. 14.—Leading at the end of the first half by a shaky 11-14 margin, Navy's courtmen lost their bearings in the throes of a belated Duke rally this afternoon and floundered into defeat by a score of 44-37.

Two pint-sized Duke guards, Ed Bergman and Russ Swindell, engineered the second-half uprising that struck the Middies squarely amidships and capsized them. They utilized "Stork" Holley, 6-foot 6-inch Duke center as a pivot, and chalked up 22 points between them while the hapless home team vainly tried to stem the tide.

Duke handled the ball more cleanly than its host, was faster, and took advantage of every break that came its way. Capt. Bob Laney, Navy forward, kept his mates in the running with a brand of sharpshooting that netted 14 points. George Ghesquierre was a close second with 10, but their combined efforts were not enough to stand off the Blue Devils final rush.

Swindell and Bergman got the range within 4 minutes after the start of the second half and returned the lead to Duke at 20-18, and thereafter Navy was strictly a runner-up. With Bergman continually breaking up Navy's offense by snatching the ball on lazy passes, and Swindell looping shots in from long range, the visitors forged ahead into a comfortable lead and were never headed. Parsons' five field goals and fouls were no drawback to the Southern Conference boys as they galloped home.

Eastern Bows To Navy Plebes In 43-28 Game

Fast Second-Half Attack Overcomes Locals' Early Lead

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 14.—With a great rush of field goals in the second quarter, the Navy plebes, in their initial game of basketball here this afternoon, defeated Eastern High, of Washington, by 43 to 28.

Eighteen points were scored in the second period, with Squires and Habnett leading in the onslaught and Falconer feeding them the ball for quick breaks.

Eastern started its second team, which led in the first quarter by 8 to 6. Its first line-up, which took the floor at the start of the second quarter, was overcome in that period by 18 to 8, the plebes also getting margins in the remaining two quarters.

Holben, left forward, with 12 points, and Mills, center, with 10, were the heavy scorers for Eastern. Each had five floor goals but Holben also scored two field goals, the only ones tallied by Eastern during the game.

'Tots' Long Paced Indoor Hitters

"Tots" Long, rotund leadoff man for Victory Post of the American Legion, two-time District of Columbia indoor baseball champions, led the Community Center Indoor Baseball League in hitting, with an average of .395, according to figures just released. Charley Aquiline, Legion receiver, was the runner-up with .354.

Victory Post compiled a team batting average of .290. The drop from last year's amazing figure of .435 is ascribed to the new league ruling by which balls deflected off rafters and ceiling were automatic out. The former International and Eastern League third baseman batted .576 under last year's rules.

The pitching records also show why the "Nine Old Men" roc roughshod over all opposition. Less than two runs per game were scored off Victory Post's two-star pitching staff, while the batting juggernaut averaged over seven runs per game.

Individual batting records of the Legionnaires were:

Gallaudet's Wrestlers Bow to Maryland, 19-15

Gallaudet wrestlers lost a match to Maryland University last night, 19-15 in the Kendall Green gym. The Terp grapplers were forced to forfeit two bouts, in the 135 and 145-pound classes, but took the meet with victories in all but one of the other classes. The only triumph registered by the Blue was in the 128-pound division, in which Sullivan pinned Maryland's Meade in 5:00 minutes.

Horse Show Scheduled at Fort Myer

Roosevelt Steeds to Be Exhibited at Benefit For Infantile Fund

Horses owned by the Roosevelt family will be exhibited at the President's Birthday Horse Show to be held at the Fort Myer riding hall on the nights of January 25 and 26.

The show will combine colorful military ceremonies and exhibitions by the crack units at Fort Myer with a program of hunting and jumping events featuring the best open jumpers and hunters of Maryland, Virginia, Washington and more remote horse sections of the country.

The proceeds of the two performances will go to swell the fund to fight infantile paralysis in the District of Columbia and the Nation.

There is a keen rivalry between the top stables of Maryland, Virginia and Washington, but it is tame in comparison with the spirited competition between the civilian and Army riders. In this show, under the eyes of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, who will attend, both the civilian and Army riders can be expected to outdo their best performances in the struggle for the ribbons and other prizes.

Class No. 1, for open hunters, handy jumping class and the exhibition of the President's horses will start Wednesday's show. The next event will be an exhibition by one of the Fort Myer superior cavalry troops, then come the classes for park or road hacks, the open jumpers and another exhibition by one of the crack artillery units.

Paul Waner Sees No Reason Why He Should Not Hit .350

By the Associated Press.

Sarasota, Fla., Jan. 14.—Paul Waner let it be known today he intends to be "big poison" again during the coming baseball season.

The hard-hitting Pittsburgh outfielder, whose batting average dropped to .280 last season, said he expects to hit "around .350" this year and "I've never had a better chance to lead the league in batting."

"I've got just as good chance to hit well this year as I've ever had," he declared. "I feel fine and I'm in good shape. There's no reason why I shouldn't do as well as I've ever done."

And he has done pretty well in his 19 years of professional ball. Over a 12-year stretch he was one of baseball's top hitters, and pounded the ball for a .354 average in 1937, the season before his slump.

Last year, however, Paul's brother, Lloyd, was the "big poison" of the family combination, hitting .313.

Waner wouldn't alibi for his slump.

"I'm just a .250 hitter who was lucky for 12 years and last year was the thirteenth for me," he said.

Gosum Wins Santa Anita's $10,000 Race

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Jan. 14.—Shoving the big-name favorites far into the background, Nelson A. Howard's Gosum captured the $10,000 San Pasqual Handicap at Santa Anita Park today as Main Man, Esposa, Heelfly and other short-priced topnotchers ran out of the money.

Jockey Archie Gray booted Gosum into a sensational burst of speed in the last sixteenth of the mile and one-eighth race and came on in to win by a length over A. A. Baroni's No Dice.

Further confounding the handicappers, Louis B. Mayer's Quick Devil ran third as the rest of the eligibles for the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap trailed in.

Esposa, the mare owned by William Zeizler, which had been installed a 5-2 favorite, finished tenth, while Alfred G. Vanderbilt's Heelfly was tabbed in the seventh position.

Main Man, Quick Devil's stablemate, had a length lead going into to the stretch, but faded and was ninth to the wire.

Maj. Austin C. Taylor's Indian Broom was fourth, while it took a photo finish to separate No Dice and Quick Devil.

The winner, never out of striking distance of the leaders, was timed at 1 minute 50 seconds.

The crowd of upward of 40,000 wagered $139,749 on the race, and Gosum's win was worth $37 to win bettors.

Central Y. M. C. A. Holds Life Guard Classes

E. Holt Neese, boys swimming director at the Central Y. M. C. A., is making every possible effort to prepare prospective District life guards for their duties before the outdoor season begins. His life-saving courses, featuring Red Cross life-saving instruction, begin Monday afternoon at 3:45 at the "Y" pool. There are 26 boys enrolled at present, though a larger number is expected to attend the first class. The age limit is 12 to 18 years.

Baugh Starts At Left Half For All-Stars

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Jan. 14.—Football bids a belated farewell here tomorrow when the New York Giants, champions of the National Professional League, and a powerful aggregation of pro players comprising an all-star team, meet at Wrigley Field.

Predictions that the battle would be hard fought came from both camps, where for two weeks or more the squads have been training. Ray Flaherty, coach of the Washington Redskins, and Elmer (Gus) Henderson, erstwhile coach of the Los Angeles Bulldogs and newly signed by the Detroit Lions, are in charge of the All-Americans, while Steve Owen came out to guide his Giants.

The All-Stars plan to send in its most potent scoring threat at the kickoff, with Slingin' Sammy Baugh, Clarke Hinkle, Lloyd Cardwell and Erny Pinckert in the backfield, and Gaynell Tinsley and Perry Schwartz holding down the end positions.

New Armory Record Set in ¾ Mile; Lash Wins 2-Mile

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 14.—In a near photo-finish with Leslie MacMitchell, brilliant New York University freshman, veteran Gene Venzke of the New York Athletic Club tonight set a new armory record of 3 minutes 7.2 seconds in capturing the featured three-quarter mile run at the annual track meet of the Sixty-ninth Regiment A. A.

The promising youngster and the popular winged footer dominated the running all the way. MacMitchell jumped into the lead at the gun, held it for the first three and a half laps, and then clung to Venzke's heels like a plaster as they whirled through the final hour circuits on the new armory floor. The former mark, set last year by Lou Burns, was 3.11.8.

Archie San Romani, American 3,000-meter record holder, was third, with Lieut. Richard Bauer of the Shore A. C., Elberon, N. J., fourth, and Howard Borck of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, national 800-meter champion, a bad last.

Don Lash, the Indiana State policeman, ran the same type of race he had a week ago in taking the 2-mile special in 9:17.4, far slower than his 1938 meet mark of 9:11.

Wesley Wallace, flashy Fordham junior who a week ago set a new world record for 500 meters, came up from second place on the back stretch to pass Lou Burns, of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, and go on to win the 600-yard run in 1:13.5, 1 1-10 seconds under his armory record time of a year ago.

Wiffy Cox, Congressional pro, has again signed with the nationally known firm that employed him last year. . . . "Wiffy Cox" clubs and balls will be on the market in the spring. . . . Mrs. Myron Davy, Congressional, left Friday night for the Augusta Women's Tournament, that starts tomorrow with a field including many of the top-ranking stars in the country. . . . Mrs. Davy is the lone local entry, out of the five that were invited. . . . Aside to the public links committee seeking representation in the District and United States Golf Associations—the local "czar" of the municipal links, Dave Herman, U. S. G. A. representative, is the man to contact as to relations with the national body, as they will refer your application to him. . . . Herman put the club in the U. S. G. A. before, and after withdrawing without a good reason, you will have considerable trouble regaining your membership. . . . As far as the local association is concerned, the constitution states the members shall be "private clubs," and public links courses are not eligible for membership. . . . Johnny Burke may not be able to defend his District amateur championship, as the D. C. Golf Association is expected to amend its by-laws, making the club members competing in the championship tournament, be resident members. . . . Burke joined the Capital club last year two hours before playing in the D. C. Amateur, after arriving in town two days before to attend Georgetown, from his home in Rhode Island. . . . Still, the Best Man Won.

Spencer Is Elected

Ken Spencer was elected President of the Capital Golf Club, John Paul Jones vice president and Otis Kephart secretary and treasurer. . . . The board of governors include Pro Tony Sylvester, Roy K. Aten, T. G. Herbert, Frank Sullivan, Harvey Rabbitt, Joseph Keating, T. P. Hayden and James A. Hayes. . . . The club obtained a five-year lease on the property, with an option to buy. . . . Al Jamison, Indian Spring mentor, is leaving today with Phil Berman.

An ambitious Rock Creek matchmaker, one of the many that inhabit the clubhouse these days, wagered a small sum that Levi Yoder and Andy Oliveri could not shoot a best ball of 32 for 9 holes on A course . . . He paid off at the end of 7 holes and walked disgustedly into the clubhouse, as the duo totaled 21 for 7 holes, with 6 birdies and a bogey . . . Oliveri, Yoder, Manager Harry Graham and Pro Al Price all birdied the eighth hole in a foursome later in the day . . . Cliff Spencer has a task of converting Dr. George Greeves from a southpaw to an orthodox swinger in as short a time as possible . . . The doctor has cracked the century mark just once, and figures he can do better right-handed . . . Jess Baggett is on a scoring spree, according to Spencer, while Eddie Bailey hit a new personal scoring mark with a 77 . . . Mel Shorey is temporarily in the candy business as local representative of a company owned by his brother John Shorey, former top-ranking local amateur . . .

Diffenbaugh Again

Two better than average four-ball matches last week found George Diffenbaugh and Ross Hollebaugh trouncing Tommy Doerer, jr., and Al Houghton at Kenwood, led by George's 69, and Al Jamison and Mrs. Betty Meckley splitting with Wiffy Cox and Mrs. Davy at Congressional, with Wiffy also cracking a 69, and Mrs. Meckley an 85, to pace the women . . . Bill Richardson is nearly ready to go to press with the National Golf Review, that was a real success last year . . . Fred McLeod's picture adorned the front page of the P. G. A. magazine for January, while the story of his P. G. A. Senior's triumph is on all or part of ten pages of the issue . . . The Maryland State Golf Association dinner-meeting Friday at Roland Park will draw two representatives from all local clubs—the body held an executive meeting at the Willard Hotel here last week—very secretly . . . J. C. Putnam dropped chip shot on the second hole at Manor recently, birdied the eighth, and then holed a seven iron shot on the fifteenth for an eagle deuce, according to R. Coontz, Herb Lacey and George Messing . . . Georgetown University's golfers are practicing with Coach Sylvester every Saturday morning—and they are expected to be at full strength by April.

If you've heard this one stop me, about the perrenial slicer, who for 15 years patiently stepped to many a thousand golf tees and sliced away, into traps, lakes, hazards, etc. Finally he took a vacation to Bermuda, took his sticks, and when he stepped on the first tee it was the thrill that comes once in a lifetime—the entire course was bordered by water—on the left. His slice was perfect. So with a perfect golfing vacation in mind he took his stance, swung—and hooked into the ocean.

Whitaker's Texas Silks, prominent since the opening of the Florida season, flew victoriously here today when Crepe defeated four rivals in the Fort Dallas Park Purse, feature of the only stakeless Saturday program of the meeting. Away from the turf wars since last June, the Omar Khayyam colt clicked by a length under Eddie Arcaro. Warren Wright's Count Morse, the favorite, beat Mrs. W. Plunket Stewart's Milk Punch by another length for the place. Sandy Boot was fourth and Medica last.

Showers and a sloppy track, a Florida rarity, prevailed for the sport. A torrential rain fell just after scratch time this morning and light showers followed at intermittent intervals, taking considerable enthusiasm from the activities. Small fields ruled. With the crowd augmented somewhat by those who could not enjoy the beach, it was estimated that about 10,000 fans were on hand.

Crepe a close second choice to Count Morse at 2 to 1, waded the 7 furlongs in 1:24 flat.

Three of the five starters—Count Morse, Sandy Boot and Maedic—are eligible for the rich Widener Challenge Cup March 4

Little Rhody, a $26.80 for $2 proposition, won the third race by a neck, but the result wasn't official for more than 15 minutes while the stewards deliberated on whether or not to order a disqualification. Shohola was second, four lengths before the short-priced favorite, City Judge.

As the three placed horses approached the eighth pole, Little Rhody, on the inside, bore out and bothered City Judge. Shohola, on the outside, bore in from the outside, but Little Rhody appeared responsible for the interference to the favorite. Shohola's trainer, L. P. Harlan, lodged a foul claim, but the officials finally allowed the result to stand.

Eddie Arcaro, by guiding the $12.50 for $2 Wrenace to an easy victory in the seventh race, drew up to a tie with Don Meade, with seven winners apiece at the meeting. Wrenace, giving Arcado a double for the day while Meade went winnerless, moved up with a rush in the last half-mile and won, eased up, by five lengths. Isleworth was second, a length before Melody Maid. Meade was fourth with the heavily played Silas.

For the second day in a row, the mutuel handle took a big drop from the corresponding day a year ago. Today's handle, held down partly by inclement weather, was $308,308, as compared to $426,331 the same day last year. On Friday the handle was $35,000 below the 1938 figure.

fact the late Mr. McPhail was a member of the club, and it is virtually assured the tournament for 1940, despite the rotation system of the tournament between Maryland, District and Virginia clubs.

Hicks Kerr, of the Hot Springs (Va.) club, bid for the 1941 men's amateur, and the request was filed and will probably be fulfilled.

A motion to put the women's tournament in the hands of a Middle Atlantic women's committee was turned down in favor of leaving the event in the hands of the golf committee at the host club, that has handled the event in previous years. The tournament was a failure last year, attracting only 26 entries, and methods to improve the tournament from a standpoint of players was discussed without action.

A plan of Ralph Fowler to have a meeting of delegates of the Maryland, Virginia, Middle Atlantic and District Golf Associations to form another body to handle tournaments, caddy problems, green affairs, etc., resulted in a motion to send delegates when the meeting is called.

The links group will also co-operate with the Midatlantic Association of Greenskeepers by asking the latter body to attend a joint meeting when the problems are at their height next summer. Dr. Robert A. Keilty, Congressional, former president, was the sponsor of the plan.

Tigers Lose To Maryland

Using its regulars only sparingly, Maryland University's five defeated Hampden-Sydney, 34-25, at College Park last night for its second victory in as many nights and its fourth of the season. Proceeds of the game, amounting to about $40, were turned over to the Infantile Paralysis Fund.

Only a handful of spectators were on hand to watch the Terps preserve their undefeated record at home in a game that abounded in atrocious shooting, ball-handling and defensive play. Apparently unable to solve Maryland's zone defense, the Tigers, who recently walloped American University, spent the entire game trying to shoot from midcourt. As a result, about half their attempts entirely missed the backboard and many more fell harmlessly to one side or another, far from their mark.

The Terps, who displayed good form in upsetting Duke University the night before, suffered a letdown and only the mediocrity of their opposition prevented their fourth defeat of the season.

Dick Tennyson, Cornered, Refuses to Speak For Himself, But Haight Does at Length Playground Official Plays 'John Alden;' Left Job Once but Became Homesick

By Walter Haight.

HAIGHT

It would, of course, take me longer than usual to shake bus fare out of Junior Haight's bank on a morning when I overslept. But by shifting from a fingernail file to a buttonhook I finally slid out a dime that had been winking at me through the slot in the back of the pig.

I had promised to meet Dick Tennyson at the playground office and who would have thought that a half an hour later I would be there playing a "Myles Standish Skit" with Dick and myself in the leading roles.

I made my curtsy in the doorway of his office and the assistant superintendent of playgrounds looked up from his desk and greeted me.

"As I live and breathe, if it isn't Walter Haight." I came back with my usual snappy retort, "Yes and in the flesh." He mowed me down with, "In plenty of flesh."

Having thus disposed of the overweight question, I proceeded forthwith to the business of the day, informing Dick that I was there to get some dope for one of my "Washington Sports Heroes, Past and Present" articles.

"Walter, you have come to the right place," was Dick's surprising answer. It was a blow to me. After all these years was Dick getting swelled headed? Those words just didn't seem to add up when coming from a once modest fellow who gave everybody a boost up the ladder and then tried to climb the bare bricks by himself.

John Alden Tennyson

But I was soon to determine that Tennyson was only playing a John Alden role with me doing Priscilla—about the the equivalent of Arch McDonald playing Little Eva crossing the ice, with Ferdinand, the Bull as a hound dog.

"Now, just a minute, Walter. We might as well do this thing right. I'll be back in a second," said Tennyson as he left the room. I was just finding out the real Tennyson. I guessed that he had gone to the files to bring out a stack of pictures of himself.

On the wall was a photo of a soccer game. The field house in the background was familiar. It brought back memories of the short period when I essayed to be a playground instructor. I was assigned to an uptown grounds. It was really the life. I umpired a softball game, played checkers with the youngsters or took one of them on for a set of paddle tennis.

But the day came when I was transferred to another grounds. It was like being called from the sun deck of an ocean liner to shovel coal in the hold.

"Hey, fellows," yelled a freckled-faced youngster as I came in the gate, "I'll bet this fat guy is going to be the new playground teacher."

The boys stood around and gave me their No. 1 hard looks. For some reason I couldn't do anything right for them. I called a player out on a close play at third and the way they acted you would have thought I came to the playgrounds to pass out poisoned candy or put rat powder in the sandbox. Several older fellows invited me to go outside the fence and make the same decision. I didn't go. In fact, I didn't even go out to lunch.

Something Goes On

At intervals I noticed that all the larger boys would be missing. I inquired as to the cause and was told that the gang in this neighborhood was having a feud with some boys a few blocks away.

As the afternoon wore on, I became more and more unpopular. At closing time the boys congregated near the gate and it looked as if I was going to have to do some running to get by them. One thing was certain, in the future I would be the former playground instructor there.

But the old Haight ingenuity saved me. One little fellow had been more or less friendly during the day. He followed me around looking up at me wide-eyed most of the time.

"Young man," I whispered, "would you like to make a dime?"

He was all for it. I instructed him to go to the other neighborhood, inform the boys there that the gang down here was coming up there to attack them and that it might be a good idea if they came down here and sort of caught the opposition unawares. My messenger went through the enemy lines unmolested.

It wasn't long before the fists started flying outside the grounds. I didn't stay to see the action.

Dick returned to the room and, as I had expected, was carrying a bundle of photographs. He sat at his desk and pulled up two chairs for me.

"Now Walter, here's a real sports hero for you, Earl Clark. Remember him?" It was "John Alden'" Tennyson speaking.

"But Dick," I was trying to get some words in edgewise, "I know about Earl, but——"

Tennyson Continues

"Earl holds the major league putout record and he was one of the greatest athletes we ever had on the playgrounds," went on John Alden Tennyson.

"I didn't come here to write about Clark. Why don't——." It was me in the Pricilla role.

"Now you take Denny Sothern then. He was a playground boy. Went up to the majors out of Georgetown. He shares a big league record with—I just can't remember the other players. Now Denny——"

"But Dick," I interrupted, still trying to Priscilla, "tell you the truth I came down here to——"

"Tony Latona would make a good subject. Funny thing too. He was once eliminated from a tennis tournament on one grounds but won the championship at another, and then went on to win the city title. I was a year finding it out. Now Tony——" continued John Alden.

"Perhaps I can get around to a piece on Latona, but why don't you——"

"Walter, we have had a lot of sports heroes working on the grounds," interrupted John Alden. "Now take Tuffy Leemans, Much Dubofsky, Bob LeGendre, Joey Kauffman."

"Why don't you speak for yourself?" it was Priscilla Haight speaking the line he had been trying to get in for a quarter of an hour.

Dick glanced at the office clock.

"How time flies," he said, "it's 11 o'clock already and I have to address Mrs. King's eighth grade class at 11:15. I don't want you to think I'm chasing you out. Stick around and look at the clippings and photos."

His Parting Shot

"Well, so long, Walter," said Dick, reaching for his hat. And then, looking at my waist, he continued, "Boy, you are putting on weight."

As he went out the door I replied, "Why don't you speak for yourself, Dick?"

But despite the modesty of Richard S. Tennyson, he's my meat.

Dick for more than 20 years has been the director of boys' activities on the District playgrounds. And when statistics show that the daily attendance of the grounds is 10,000 boys, he certainly qualifies as a sports hero. He was born and raised over in Georgetown, played on the grounds as a boy. Went in for track at Georgetown while beginning his playground work.

Tennyson once tried to break away from his boys. He took a job in Haiti. It was his duty, with a companion, to reconnoiter for the Haitian topographic survey. They went into the wild country to determine whether the natives were friendly and to gather water supply data for the survey crew which followed. Dick roamed the jungles, hills and mountains for less than a year before he returned to beg for his old playground job.

When Dick first joined the department there were 11 grounds. Now there are 43 operating the year around. He has conducted upward of 2,000 track meets, but that figure is my guess. He has dealt with boys of all ages and characters and his friends say that he has never had any trouble with youngsters. I believe Dick can actually hear growing pains doing their work.

Dick knows a thousand human interest stories about boys and the playgrounds, but, as heretofore related, he was not in a talkative mood when he found out my mission of yesterday.

However, I can supply an anecdote that will serve closing purposes.

At the city track meets, there is much clerical work involving entries, results, etc. Dick hired one of the city's well known reporters to type the results. The meet was in a rather poor section, but one where track was taken very seriously.

Uneasy Reporter

The reporter made his "office" at a bench and a table under a tree near the main gate. Before the meet began, the five instructors, Dick and the reporter had a meeting at which the newspaperman was "ribbed" into believing that there might be a lot of trouble. The scribe was given a whistle, with instructions that if he was attacked he could blow and the others would come to his rescue.

The finals of the 100-pound 60-yard dash, the 115-pound high jump and the unlimited broadjump were being conducted when there sounded a loud blast on a whistle. The playground officials ran to the reporter's table.

"We better send around to the precinct and get the captain to detail some police around here. There's going to be plenty of action soon," protested the reporter.

The playground officials looked at one another inquiringly.

"Lean over here, fellows," said the reporter, "I ain't exactly scared, men, but somebody had been throwing halves of bricks at me. Why, one hit me in the back of the head just before I blew the whistle."

Our friend, the reporter, will know when he reads this, if he does, that the half of brick that hit him in the back of the neck was really a pebble less than an eighth of an inch in circumference and flicked at him playfully by Dick Tennyson, who happened to be passing at the moment.

Haymakers Test Brewer Quintet Today

Troy Team Anxious For Third Straight Triumph Over Locals

The official American Basketball League nemesis of Washington Heurich Brewers invades Heurich gymnasium this afternoon at 3 o'clock when Carl Husta's veteran Troy (N. Y.), Haymakers bid for their third consecutive victory of the season over the local Brewers.

In a determined effort to turn tables on the rugged Upstate New York visitors, Coach Joe Dreyfus will have his best line-up available, and will introduce several new faces calculated to have a big hand in hostilities.

A new scale of popular prices will be introduced today whereby men will be admitted for only 55 cents and ladies for 40 cents, and attractive Heurich Amateur Basketball League game will precede and follow the main attraction.

In the preliminary features District of Columbia Fire Department is to engage Hour Glass at 1:45 p. m. and Dapper Dan meets Hot Shoppes at 4 p. m.

In an early season game before the Brewers were well organized, veteran Troymen were merciless in routing the local boys in Heurich Gymnasium, 38 to 19.

Smarting under their worst defeat of the season the Heurich men more recently invaded Troy, N. Y., and lost, 35-to-27, but not before squaring several accounts.

Mickey Schonfeld, clever Heurich guard, held scoreless in a previous stand against Troy, contributed 13 points to the Heurich total. Again the local Brewers played great defensive ball against Al Kellett and Moe Dubilier, high scoring Troy aces, limiting them to 3 points.

Fifth ranking among the American Basketball League's individual scorers with 133 points, Schonfeld again will bear the brunt of the Brewer attack.

Pulchritude and High Scores Feature Dixie Sweepstakes

Pretty little Betty Babson, 11 years old, of New Haven, who defeated Virginia Frey, of Hyatsville, in a dual match, then entered the stake competition. She was the youngest entry

Ida Simmons, who retained her championship with a 1,118 total, and Mabel Herring, national individual champion, are shown above. The Norfolk ace and Lorraine Gulli battled through 7 games and then a 168 game by Ida clinched first prize of $100

Ida Simmons Winner In Dixie Sweepstakes

Norfolk Girl Wins Bowling Classic For Fourth Time; Lorraine Gulli Fails in Closing Stages of Battle

Ida Simmons, undisputed queen of the women's duckpin world, came through in the style that has marked her reign at the top to win the eighth annual Times Dixie Sweepstakes last night at Rosslyn Alleys with a total of 1,118, third highest in the history of the nine-game tournament. It marked the Norfolk star's fourth victory and third in succession.

Miss Simmons and Washington's Lorraine Gulli had split the title between them for six of the seven rollings of the tournament that annually attracts a banner field.

And yesterday the anticipated duel between the long rivals found them sharing the lead throughout, with Miss Gulli topping the blond marksman from Virginia in seven of the nine games, but failing in the stretch when Miss Simmons rallied with a great 168 game that wiped out the deficit of the early games and clinched the $100 first prize.

Second prize of $60 went to Miss Gulli, for her 1,108 total, while the remainder of the field of 50, that had practically battled for third place since the first block at Silver Spring, was topped by Katherine Vick, Norfolk, with 1,059, worth $35

Jean White Fourth

Jean White, Baltimore, took fourth prize of $30 with a 1,043 total, 10 pins ahead of Ethel Brewer, of the same city, with 1,033, and Audrey Mullaney, also of the Oriole City, who was five pins back of Brewer with 1,028 and won $20. Edna Brockwell, who forged into third place at the sixth game with a 161 effort, finally took seventh prize money of $15, with 1,025, while Caroline Hiser, second at the end of the Silver Spring block, won $5 for 1,023.

Block prizes for high set and game out of the money worth $5 each went to Irene Krasnak, Bridgeport, first set, 372; Katherine Quigley, Washington, second block, 353, and Ruth Zentz, Baltimore, third block, 357. Respective game highs went to Lillian Miller, Baltimore, 151; Blanche Wooten, 134, and Alma Shulte, Silver Spring, 142.

The luck of the draw placed Misses Simmons and Gulli on the same alley and, throughout the three blocks, at Silver Spring, Arcadia and Rosslyn, they battled before a capacity gallery for the lead, and, game by game, it became more apparent that the title would be decided between them.

Miss Gulli takes the Lead

Miss Gulli took a four-pin lead at the first game with 140 to 136, held a single pin margin in the second game, 126 to 125, and went ahead by 14 pins at the one-third mark with a 128 game to 121.

Cracking mark after mark and getting good counts, Miss Gulli hit 145 in the fourth to Miss Simmons' 111, and won the fifth straight game from the Norfolk star with 118 to 110. A strike on a spare in the sixth game in the final box by Miss Gulli boosted her total to 122 as Miss Simmons won the first game with 139. They both slipped in the seventh game, 105 to 101 for the leader, but the eighth game proved to be the deciding one as Miss Simmons bowled 168 and Miss Gulli lost all her lead with a 114. The latter won the last game, but it was well over by that time.

Betty Babson, 11-year-old Baltimorean, rolled the entire nine games and included 109 and 110 efforts in her string, totaling 818.

Budge-Vines Ticket Sales Are Mounting

That Washington tennis fans will heartily support the local appearance of Donald Budge and Ellsworth Vines, at College Park next Monday, was a near certainty last night with the announcement that ticket sales have already mounted to almost $1,000. A crowd as large as the record gathering which viewed Vines' appearance here two years ago is expected to jam Ritchie Coliseum to the rafters.

Budge, the red-headed Oakland, Calif., ace whose recent shift to the professional ranks, and Vines will clash in two out of three sets. In addition to this encounter, Bruce Barnes and Dick Sheen, well-known pros, will meet in a special match, joining with the two stars later on for doubles.

Reservations can be obtained at A. G. Spalding, Hecht Co., Sports Center, Willard Hotel, A. A. A., Keystone Auto Club and Maryland University. All seats will sell for $1.65. It is Vines' fourth appearance here, all other visits having resulted in victories for the combination golfer and net.

Vines Makes It 4-All; Beats Budge in 3 Sets

Minneapolis, Jan. 14 (AP).—Ellsworth Vines, world's professional tennis champion, evened his series at four-all with Don Budge, former Davis Cup star, by taking a three-set match before 6,000 persons tonight, 2-6, 6-2, 6-4.

Twice in the third set Vines won games on net balls that just fell across, giving Budge no chance to return them.

Last-Quarter Flurry Wins For Eagles

American U. Steals Show From Bucknell; Schulze, Byham Score

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Lewisburg, Pa., Jan. 14.—A slow-starting American University quintet hit its stride in the final 10 minutes of play here tonight, to hand Bucknell's Bisons a 38-33 defeat before a crowd of 1,600.

Sparked by Capt. Emerson Bartlett and Hugo Schulze, the Eagles turned on the pressure in the fourth quarter, to wipe out a 30-25 deficit, and then forged ahead to win, as Bing Byham netted the field goal that broke a 32-32 deadlock.

Throughout the first half Coach Staff Cassell's charges constantly worked the ball into position for set shots, but failed to capitalize on their opportunities, trailing, 23 to 15, at the intermission.

High scorer for the visitors was Schulze, who whipped the cords for six field goals and two fouls. Three of his two-pointers came during a third-quarter flurry that carried the D. C. team within striking distance of the Bisons.

The game was part of a program marking the opening to intercollegiate athletics of Bucknell's new Davis Gymnasium.

Kiddie Duckpin Match Here Won By Betty Babson

Betty Babson won the battle of the 11-year-old girl duckpin stars yesterday in the preliminary to the Dixie Sweepstakes at Silver Spring, over Virginia Frey, of Hyattsville. The Baltimorean had 181 to 164 for the two games.

The winner then entered the tournament as the youngest entry in a major pin event. Candy Recreation Alleys of New Haven, Conn., sent George Isemann a check for the entrance fee. The national tournament will be held there next year.

Miss Babson rolled 98 for the first game against 86 of the Hyattsville miss, and followed with 83 to 78. The young girls have shown unusual promise for their age, and look to be the Ida Simmons and Lorraine Gulli of the future.

White Leads Boys Club To 51-8 Court Victory

The shift of "Curley" White from an official at Boys Club of Washington basketball games to an active playing role was highly successful last night. The chunky youngster led Boys Club varsity to a 51-8 shellacking of Congress Heights, ringing up 13 points, and joining with Hathaway and Aguilino of the winners for 36 of the 51 winning tallies.

Store Sales Here Higher Than Year Ago

Gain Is 2.23 Per Cent Also Rise in Week U. S. Average Lower

Two department stores in Washington reported decreases from the previous week, all others reported increases ranging from approximately 2 to 28 per cent; average of all stores, plus 5.13 per cent the weekly survey of the Department of Commerce said yesterday. Compared with a year ago, two stores reported decreases; all others reported increases ranging from approximately 2 to 11 per cent; city average, plus 2.23 per cent. Clearings were, $24,534,481; year ago, $23,744,507. Visitors to Smithsonian Institution, 18,512; previous week, 22,769; year ago, 17,430. Building permits, $766,600, including a $300,000 reservoir. Total passenger revenue, past calendar week, Capital Transit Co., $208,400; year ago, $217,342, with decrease attributed to the holiday.

Business, since the turn of the year, has apparently leveled off slightly more than seasonally, according to reports to the department from 36 key cities. While, on the whole, conditions and prospects were considerably better than at this time last year, activity was nominally below that anticipated. Wholesale markets gave a better account of themselves than did retail, which were spotty, while the improvement in industrial production slackened.

Britain Reduces Adverse Balance By $200,810,000

London, Jan. 14 (AP).—British foreign trade figures today disclosed a drop of £43,000,000 (about $200,810,000) in the empire's visible import trade balance for 1938. Both export and import trade, however, declined, compared with 1937.

The figures did not reflect the new reciprocal trade treaty between the United States and Great Britain, which did not go into effect until January 1.

Excluding bullion and specie and taking only merchandise, the adverse balance for last year was £387,946,112 ($1,811,708,343), compared with £431,299,263 ($2,014,168,558) in 1937.

Imports totaled £920,437,586 ($4,298,443,526), a decrease of £107,386,842 ($556,496,552) from 1937. Exports totaled £470,883,489 ($2,199,025,889), a decrease of £50,508,005 ($235,872,383).

Great Britain imported 3,597 automobiles from the United States and 3,367 from Germany during 1936, as compared with 7,063 and 5,212, respectively, in 1937.

Wheat Prices Recover From Early Decline

Range Is Narrow Rains Are Reported Corn Closes Lower

Chicago, Jan. 14.—Wheat and corn futures did little more than mark time in today's short session. Prices were held to an extremely narrow range in quiet trading. In the wheat market prices eased early ¼-cent, but quickly recovered and held to a ¼-cent range most of the time. At the close wheat was unchanged to ⅜ lower.

Steadiness ruled throughout the session, despite lower than due Liverpool quotations and reports of rain and snow in much of the domestic wheat belt. A rally in securities gave some support and a better feeling prevailed in most quarters regarding the European political situation.

Some traders attributed the lack of inclination to press the selling side of the market to a prevalent relief that large sales of U. S. wheat have been effected recently through the Federal Surplus Commodity Corporation, possibly to China. No important export business was confirmed today either in United States or Canadian grain.

Chicago wheat closed unchanged to ⅜ lower, May, 68½@68⅝; July, 68¾@68¾. Corn, ⅛@¾ off. May, 52⅛@52⅛; July, 53⅛. Oats, ¼ to ⅜ off, May 29; soy beans, ¾ to 1 cent off, May 83½; rye, ½ to ¾ off; May, 46¼@46⅜. Lard unchanged to 5 cents up.

Market Ends Week Higher With a Rally of Leaders

Trading Slow but Picks Up at Close WPA Spending Program a Factor Defaulted Rail Bonds in Demand

By Frederick Gardner,
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Jan. 14.—The stock market finished the week with a rallying swing today that lifted leaders fractions to around 2 points and a few several notches more. Virtually all departments participated in the come-back which, although relatively quiet, was highly encouraging to brokerage quarters which had witnessed an almost uninterrupted decline since the turn of the year.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks had its best day since December 29, pushing up .9 of a point to 51.3. On the week, though, the composite suffered a net setback of 1.1 points, the largest weekly recession since mid-November.

The ticker tape moved at a slow jog during the greater part of the brief proceedings, but picked up a little momentum near the close. Transfers totalled 469,630 shares against 632,910 last Saturday.

Brokers attributed the reversal in direction partly to technical factors connected with the lengthy retreat and the belief of some speculative forces that the market had been "oversold."

Wall Street spirits, in addition, seemed to have revived with the successful opposition in the House of Representatives to the President's WPA spending program. On top of this, lessening of war talk following the Anglo-Italian Conference brought in some buyers who had feared Europe was on the brink of another explosion.

A. T. & T. Gains 3 Points

American Telephone was idle until the concluding few minutes when it ran up 3 points to 153, a new 1938-39 peak. The company's preliminary earnings for last year indicated $8.14 a share compared with $9.62 in 1937.

Others conspicuous on the forward tilt were United States Steel, Bethlehem, Youngstown, General Motors, Chrysler, Santa Fe, New York Central, Great Northern, U. S. Rubber, Montgomery Ward, Douglas Aircraft, Sperry, Consolidated Edison, North American, Anaconda, Kennecott, Westinghouse, Du Pont, Philip Morris and Cluett peabody.

Steels paid scant attention to forecasts of a small drop in next week's mill operations. The outlook for this industry was thought to be favorable after January. Motors made a tardy response to an increase in this week's automobile output. Aviations again were taken in hand as armament profits prospects brightened. Expectations Congress would pass relief legislation for the railroads in the near future propped carrier shares.

Electric Bond & Share was a strong performer in the curb, getting up 1⅛ to 11¾. Others in the advancing column were American Gas, Cities Service, Lockheed, Grumman and Gulf Oil. Sales of 89,000 shares compared with 119,000 a week ago.

The stock list was shaky throughout most of the week as the financial sector evidenced its apprehension over European affairs, a flattening out of the domestic business curve and the spending battle which got under way in Congress.

The President's defense message, high spot of the week's news, put the aircrafts and other "war babies" on the skids Thursday as some disappointment was shown over the less-than-expected outlay proposed for military preparations. Further consideration of the sum to be spent for rearming, however, helped steady stock prices later.

Rail Bonds Advance

Secondary and defaulted railroad loans led the bond market to higher levels today, with some of the carrier issues marked up a point or more.

Introduction of the Lea bill in Congress, providing a wide plan for rehabilitation of the lines' finances, encouraged purchasing, although trading was at the slowest pace since November 26.

Gains of fractions were recorded for high-grade industrial corporates, and United States Treasury issues tended is advance slightly. The foreign list was narrow and mixed. New York City traction issues improved by wide fractions.

Transactions totaled $3,554,175, face value, compared with $4,365,000 last Saturday. The Associated Press average of 20 representative rails advanced .4 of a point at 60.2; ten utilities were up .2 at 93.1, while ten industrials and ten foreign loans were unchanged from yesterday's closing.

Best among the rails were Delaware & Hudson refunding 4s at 61¼, Illinois Central 4¾s at 50¾ and Nickel Plate 4½s at 54.

Gainers among industrials were Bethlehem Steel 3¾s at 102¼, International Telephone 5s at 66½, Loew's 3½s at 100¼, Remington Rand 4¼s at 103 and Utilities Power & Light 5s at 69⅛.

Short Covering, Trade Buying Lift Cotton

Close 6-10 Points Up January 8.36 Cents Mill Stocks Light

By the Associated Press.

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—Cotton futures advanced to net gains of 6 to 10 points today as the market weathered late hedge pressure in July and October deliveries. Trade demand and some short covering left final prices close to the day's top levels.

Trade houses bid up March and May contracts at the opening, with added support from Liverpool sources. Spot houses and Southern dealers with hedge selling orders supplied most of the contracts. New Orleans was a seller at the close.

The market derived some satisfaction from the Census Bureau report showing domestic mill consumption in December of 565,307 bales, against 432,328 in the like 1937 month. Moreover, it was reported mill stocks of many standard textile items, with the exception of print cloths, were small.

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil futures trading today was exceptionally active for the short session and prices improved. Final quotations were unchanged to 3 point up. Scattered buying reflected improvement in allied markets while recent liquidation was less persistent and in part supplied contracts. Wall Street houses and brokers with Southern trade connections were buyers. Hedge pressure was light. Sales totaled 99 lots. Crude oil in the Southeast and valley was quoted at 5¼@6 cents and Texas, 5¾ bid. Cash oil demand was reported as moderate. January closed at 6.95; March, 7.11; May, 7.20@7.21; July, 7.31@7.29.

First Federal Lends 2 Million In Its First Year

According to C. H. Ellingson, executive manager, the First Federal Savings & Loan Association of Washington, celebrated the closing of its first year of operations by passing the two-million-dollar mark in the total volume of home loans placed on its books. The exact figure was $2,177,532 in loans made on first lien trusts within the District of Columbia and adjacent territory. As the association did not open for business until March 1 of last year this figure really represents the volume of business for 10 months of operations.

Mr. Ellingson also announced to its more than 7,000 savings and investment members that a dividend had been declared for the six-month period ended December 31 at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum, this dividend having been credited to each member holding a savings share account, and paid in cash to all investors in the association's investment share certificates.

The amount paid in by new and old members during the 10 months up to December 31 totaled $1,560,134.91. The assets of the association at the end of the year were $4,505,582.32.

It also was reported that the association had enjoyed a successful year in disposing of the real estate which was taken over from the Old Fidelity Association. The total value of real estate disposed of during the year amounted to $327,756, bringing the real estate owned account of the association down to a balance of $91,387 as of January 1.

Postalizing Plan Turned Down by ICC

The Interstate Commerce Commission refused yesterday to reopen the Eastern passenger fare case to permit John A. Hastings to present his plan for "postalizing" transportation. The commission, in rejecting Hastings' petition, merely said "good cause" appeared for its action.

Hastings, a former New York State senator, proposed to base passenger fares on a zone—much like the Postoffice Department employs for mail—instead of a mileage basis.

Ohio Oil Seeks Income Tax Refund

Toledo, Ohio, Jan. 14 (AP).—The Ohio Oil Co., of Findlay, Ohio, today had on file in Federal Court here a suit asking refund of $484,479 from the Government for alleged overpayment of income tax in 1930.

The amount, the petition said, covers overpayment for the Ohio Oil Co., and affiliates including the Mid-Kansas Oil & Gas Co., Enalpac Oil & Gas Co., Lincoln Oil Refining Co., Rocky Mountain Gas Co., Gallatin National Gas Co., Billings Gas Co., Illinois Pipe Co., and United Producers Pipe Line Co.

Pipe Line Companies Report Income Drop

The Interstate Commerce Commission reported yesterday that 40 major pipe line companies had transportation revenues of $56,188,421 in the third quarter of 1938, a decrease of 13.15 per cent from the corresponding period of 1937.

The 40 reporting companies handled 280,461,292 barrels of oil in the quarter, a decrease 16.18 per cent from the same period of 1937.

Commodity Index 4.7% Below Year Ago

The Labor Department reported yesterday its wholesale commodity price index advanced 0.1 per cent during the first week of 1939. The advance reflected wholesale price increases in building material, hide and leather products, foods and fuel.

The department's all-commodity index now is 77 per cent of the 1926 average, 1 per cent below a month ago and 4.7 per cent below a year ago.

Carnegie Steel Presents Town With Old Mill

Pittsburgh, Jan. 14 (AP).—Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation announced today it woud present to a Scottdale, Pa., civic group its abandoned sheet mill in the western Pennsylvania community.

A spokesman said the U. S. Steel subsidiary had no further use for the property, consisting of 11.2 acres of land and several buildings, and desired the community to benefit by using the site to attract new industries.

The property soon will be deeded to the Scottdale Civic and Industrial Association, which will lease a part of the plant to the R. E. Uptegraf Manufacturing Co., transformer makers, the spokesman said.

The plant, formerly operated by the American Sheet & Tinplate Co. before that firm's merger with Carnegie-Illinois, ceased porduction in 1931. All machinery has been removed.

ICC Recommends Coal Rate Cut

An Interstate Commerce Commission examiner recommended yesterday a reduction of 25 cents a ton in freight rates on bituminous coal, in carloads, from mines in Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky to points in Virginia, via interstate routes.

The examiner, W. R. Brennan, found the present base rate of $2.65 a ton to be "unreasonable," and urged a base rate of $2.40. The base groups are the Pocahontas on the Norfolk & Western Railway, the New River on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, and the New River-Pocahontas on the Virginian Railway.

Hitler Builds Hideaway on Mountain Peak

1,800-Foot Elevator Through Rock Leads To New Retreat

By Ralph W. Barnes

Special Cable to The Post.

Berlin, Jan. 14.—Reichsfuehrer Hitler loves height and seclusion. He has now resorted to a pavilion, perched like a huge eagle's nest on Bavarian peak, the Kehlstein, near his Berchtesgaden chalet.

A door in the rocks, 1,800 feet below, a spacious cave or chamber and an elevator shaft, shooting straight up through the mountain, provides the only approach to the pavilion, except perhaps for the most hardy among mountain climbers.

The door, the cave, the shaft—a modern electrically propelled elevator—and finally the mountain fastness itself suggests the German mythology and folk lore in which Hitler revels—or possibly something out of the Arabian Nights.

Though the pavilion and its approaches were completed many months ago, nothing has been published about it in the German press; only recently have reports concerning it circulated in Berlin.

". . . of All He Surveys"

When in the Berchtesgaden area, Hitler repairs often to his pavilion, whether in winter or summer. He sits there for hours at a time, gazing over the magnificent vista of snow-swept summits or down into his Austrian valley—the Kehlstein peak is within easy gunshot of the old Austrian frontier. Sometimes he is almost alone there. On other occasions he takes with him a few close friends or advisers.

Not even all the Nazi cabinet members, however, have been favored with an invitation to the eagle's nest. One foreign diplomat, alone, has entered through the door in the mountain, to be whisked up in the elevator to the crest. He is Andre Francois Poncet, formerly Ambassador to Berlin and now his country's envoy to Rome. Francois Poncet is reported to have been astounded by what he saw.

The door in the Kehlstein is situated only a few minutes by automobile from the Berghof, Hitler's chalet residence above Berchtesgaden. The road winds along the mountainside until finally it seems to end before an apparently enchanted portal. When a car approaches, carrying Hitler or awaited guests, the huge iron doors swing swiftly open, as if by magic—they are electrically operated.

". . . in Marble Halls"

The car drives into the mountain. The cave or chamber within turns out to be a marble-walled garage, big enough to accommodate four automobiles. From this chamber is a short tunnel or passage leading to the elevator, which is operated by a skilled engineer and assistant permanently on duty.

The shaft leads up 1,800 feet right into the pavilion on the summit. Constructed of steel and glass, the pavilion is perched on the edge of a precipice.

Besides a glass-inclosed room, large enough to accommodate about 18 persons comfortably, the pavilion, which is electrically heated, includes a kitchen and pantry. The furnishings are of Bavarian Alpine design.

Adjacent in a glass-inclosed rock garden, with grottoes and fountains. Water is pumped to the crest by electricity. The construction of the pavilion and its approaches through the mountain was a difficult and costly engineering job.

13 Governors To Meet Here for Economic Parley

Governors of 13 Southern States last night were invited to meet here next Friday to demand elimination of freight rate "discrimination," and to check up on administration of the Federal wage-hour law.

Lawrence W. Robert, executive director of the Southeastern Governors' Conference, called the meeting to discuss the report of the National Emergency Council, which dubbed the South "Economic Problem No. 1."

Nine States comprise the conference and chief executives of four neighboring States—Virginia, Kentucky, Oklahoma and Texas—also were invited.

Conference members are North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Arkansas, Tennessee, Florida, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi. Gov. E. D. Rivers, of Georgia, is chairman.

3 Hotels Face Strike Threat Over Contract

Union hotel workers last night threatened to close the Hamilton and Annapolis hotels and the Hay-Adams House unless an agreement over the closed-shop provision of their proposed contract is reached by tomorrow.

James McNamara, vice president at large of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes International Alliance and Bartender's international League of America, said union members have indorsed strike action "unless these houses show an immediate disposition to meet the union's demands."

Joseph C. McGarraghy, attorney for the hotels, declared:

"We are prepared to agree to a union shop, but not to a closed shop. We feel that we owe our guests too great a degree of responsibility to allow the choosing of employes to pass into the hands of anyone but the management."

E. J. Carroll, New York, general manager of the hotel chain, will come to Washington tomorrow.

Pay Roll Slash Saves $1,400,000 a Year; 500 More to Go

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 14.—The administration of Ohio's new Republican Governor, John W. Bricker, has fired 1,047 State employes in five days. It made plans tonight to discharge 500 more next week.

Back of the shake-up lay Bricker's avowed determination to provide an economical administration without new taxes by eliminating what he termed "a needless waste of public funds."

Salary savings made thus far were estimated unofficially at $1,400,000 a year. There was no estimate of the amount saved by cancellation of orders for materials and supplies placed by the former administration, headed by Martin L. Davey, Democrat.

Department heads, ordered by Bricker to "cut to the bone," abolished the positions of most of those fired.

La Follette Reforms Killed

Madison, Wis., Jan. 14 (AP).—The State Senate, by a vote of 20 to 11, today repealed all the 26 governmental reorganization shifts enacted by executive order under former Gov. Philip La Follette, Progressive.

The Republican-Democratic coalition performed what some members described as a funeral service over the major section of the 1937 reorganization act under which the last Legislature delegated broad powers to the executive.

Vanderbilt Ousts 322

Providence, R. I., Jan. 14 (AP).—Following out his pre-election economy pledge, Gov. Vanderbilt this week ordered some 122 employes lopped from the State's pay roll, and indicated other dismissals would follow. Two weeks ago, 200 men in the public works department were dropped in the interests of economy.

Employes dropped today included the entire division of elections, including its $5,000-a-year chairman, Robert E. Kelley.

Eldest of Musicas Makes $10,000 Bail

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—George Dietrich-Musica, oldest of the living trio of Musica brothers, came out of jail again today as Federal authorities intensified their efforts to untangle the financial maze of the McKesson & Robbins drug firm.

In gaining liberty on a $10,000 bond, George left behind in Tombs Prison Robert Dietrich-Musica, who failed to produce bail. George Vernard-Musica was still in the Federal House of Detention in the absence of bail.

Roosevelt Sets A. M. A. Parley On Health Plan

He and His Committee Will See Doctors on Proposals for Law

Representatives of the American Medical Association, defendants in antimonopoly proceedings brought by the Department of Justice, will confer here today and tomorrow with President Roosevelt and his interdepartmental committee on health on the proposed Federal health program which is to be outlined to Congress soon in a special message.

The A. M. A. representatives, it was said, asked the privilege of submitting suggestions before the President drafts his recommendations for Congress. They will meet today with the interdepartmental committee on health, of which Miss Josephine Roche, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, is chairman, and tomorrow they will confer with the President.

The A. M. A. has expressed agreement with parts of the proposed Federal health program but has opposed health insurance.

Whether a recommendation for such insurance would be included in the President's message was a matter of speculation, although persons close to the White House thought the President would leave it to the discretion of Senator Wagner, of New York, who, it is understood, will draft the legislation, whether or not to include health insurance in the initial legislation.

The contemplated program which, at the end of ten years, would cost the Federal and State governments around $850,000,000, would require an initial outlay of $65,000,000. Designed to provide medical care for the 40,000,000 who, according to Miss Roche, now have inadequate care, the program is said to embrace expansion of public health services, special care of mothers and children, increased hospital facilities, medical and hospital care of public assistance and low-income groups and insurance against loss of wages due to disabilities.

The interdepartmental committee has been at work on the program since last summer and is expected to confer with the President before he begins drafting of the special message. It was indicated the President would begin writing the message late this week or early next.

Administration Maps Fight on Tax Exemption

Justice, Treasury Ready For Senate Hearings Starting Tuesday

By the United Press.

The Treasury and Justice departments last night completed preparation of evidence by which they hope to persuade Congress to enact legislation removing tax exemption privileges from future Government bond issues and salaries of Government employes.

Presentation of evidence will begin Tuesday before the special Senate Committee on Taxation of governmental securities and salaries, headed by Senator Brown (Democrat), Michigan.

Both departments have prepared lengthy briefs in support of their view that tax exemption could be eliminated without a constitutional amendment.

Debated 20 Years

President Roosevelt sent a message to Congress at the last session urging consideration of the question. It has been debated more than two decades.

The Treasury does not propose retroactive legislation.

At present most Federal obligations are wholly or partially exempt from taxation by States. The same privilege is accorded by the Federal Government to securities of States and their subdivisions. The same reciprocal privileges are extended in the case of most governmental salaries. It was estimated the most the Federal Government could receive from taxing State and local salaries is $15,000,000. States would receive even less.

The big issue, however, revolves around the constitutionality of legislation to eliminate the exemptions. Both the Treasury and Justice departments insists such a law would be within framework of the Constitution. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau long has advocated removal of exemption privileges.

Refinancing Is Problem

One problem Brown's committee will have to consider is whether tax exemption can be removed from future issues of governmental obligations offered in exchange for securities that previously have been accorded tax-free privileges.

The Senate committee must report by March 1. Other members of the committee include Senators Byrd (Democrat), Virginia; Townsend (Republican), Delaware; Austin (Republican), Vermont; Miller (Democrat), Arkansas, and Logan (Democrat), Kentucky.

Representatives of the Treasury and Justice departments will testify first. The Government side of the hearing is expected to be completed by February 7, after which the committee is prepared to hear opposition. Among those who have indicated they would appear against the proposal is the State Attorneys General Conference.

U. S. Forestry Chief Demands End to Waste

Silcox Asks Extension Of National Control to Insure Conservation

By the Associated Press.

The Forest Service declared yesterday that if private ownership of timberland domains was to continue the owners must conform to the Nation's forest policy.

F. A. Silcox, chief forester, in his annual report to Congress, said the alternative was "more control over private forest lands."

Cites 300 Years of Destruction

For more than 300 years, he said, American forests have been "chopped, burned and depleted; instead of being cropped they have on the whole been exploited and ravished."

That must stop if the Nation is to avoid a "wood famine" and a flooded, eroded land, he asserted.

Progressives Favor It

"Majority opinion within forest industries is probably against it, though some progressive leaders believe it necessary and inevitable," he said.

Proposals for public regulation will be placed before Congressional committees, the service said.

A recent inventory of the Nation's forest resources indicated, the service said, that there are 462,000,000 acres of commercial forest lands. If properly cared for, this area, the service declared, should provide sufficient wood for the future.

Will Underwrite Industries

"On the forest land we have," Silcox said, "we ned more and better forests to help underwrite industries dependent on them—sawmills, planing mils, remanufacturing plants, furniture and other factories."

The service said an annual Federal investment of $225,000,000 for restoration, rehabilitation and acquisition of forest lands could, over a 20-year period, raise annual forestry income to more than $5,000,000,000.

His Church Honors Rev. Niemoller

Berlin, Jan. 14 (AP).—A sad congregation filled the Lutheran Jesus Christus Church in suburban Dahlem tonight in commemoration of the forty-seventh birthday of the pastor, the Rev. Martin Niemoeller, who has been held for more than 10 months in a Nazi concentration camp. Several pastors of the Confessional (oppositional) Church participated in the tribute.

(Pastor Niemoeller was convicted March 2, 1938, of attacking leaders of the State and using his pulpit improperly. He was sent to a concentration camp, secret police asserting his release after serving seven months in prison and paying a $600 fine might lead to demonstrations against him.)

is the 7 star fuel

COMFORT

1 Real winter comfort comes from steady, even heat. Anthracite keeps the inside temperature of your home at any level you desire because it burns with a steady, dependable glow. Heat is always in reserve, always on tap, compared with "on-and-off" heat of other fuels.

CONVENIENCE

2 Anthracite meets your requirements for convenience. It gives 12-hour fueling periods in any Anthracite heater with thermostatic control, 24 hours to several days with magazine feed heaters. Automatic Anthracite stokers feed fuel and remove ashes without attention all year.

SAFETY

3 Anthracite is the safest known fuel. It can not leak, spill, explode, or evaporate into dangerous fumes. It can not ignite from spontaneous combustion. It burns within itself—with a safe and silent incandescent glow. Anthracite is absolutely safe in use or stored in any quantity.

CLEANLINESS

4 It is a scientific fact that Anthracite can not make smoke under any conditions. This eliminates all soot or smut. It keeps curtains, draperies, upholstery and walls clean. Anthracite keeps homes clean inside and out—saves housework, cuts laundry and cleaning costs.

HEALTHFULNESS

5 Anthracite's even heat means warm floors, vital for health. This steady heat helps to avoid colds and illness due to fluctuating temperatures of "on-and-off" heat from other fuels. Anthracite's cleanliness eliminates unhealthful air pollution from smoke and tarry soot.

DEPENDABILITY

6 You can store enough Anthracite in a small space to last for long heating periods. Anthracite in your basement makes you independent of snowy, zero weather that may cut off fuel supplies. It keeps your household warm even if you are away.

ECONOMY

7 There is no other fuel, whether solid, or liquid or gaseous, that is so highly concentrated as Anthracite and which contains so many standard heat units per cubic inch. Anthracite also provides all seven heating advantages at the lowest possible cost for fuel.

With any other fuel you sacrifice some of ANTHRACITE'S ADVANTAGES!

The one fuel with all seven essentials to complete heating satisfaction is Anthracite. Fuels that even challenge Anthracite's economy, sacrifice its cleanliness, healthfulness or convenience. Fuels that compete with Anthracite's convenience, lack its safety, dependability or economy. Anthracite has all these advantages because it is practically pure carbon, the most concentrated fuel in the world.

Today, in modern Anthracite equipment, Anthracite offers you any combination of automatic heating convenience and economy you want. Thermostatic control on an Anthracite boiler or furnace gives you automatic heat, and relieves you of all attention to your heating system for as long as twelve hours. Magazine feed heaters are self-fueling for twenty-four to forty-eight hours. Automatic Anthracite stokers feed fuel and remove ash automatically all season long without attention.

Ask your coal merchant or write for a copy of the free, illustrated book, "A Man's Castle." It tells why Anthracite is the preferred fuel in more than 6,000,000 homes.

This Seal of Approval appears on equipment only after a representative sample has satisfactorily passed rigid and impartial tests at the Anthracite Industries, Inc. Laboratories.

Mrs. Roosevelt More Popular Than President, Survey Finds

Public Likes Her Conduct As First Lady

But Voters Disapprov Of Her Position as Director of Son's Insurance Firm

By Dr. George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Jan. 15.—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, one of the most active women who ever lived in the White House, wins a strong vote of approval in a country-wide survey of public sentiment just completed by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

GALLUP.

Asked whether they approved or disapproved of the way Mrs. Roosevelt has occupied the place of First Lady in the six years since her husband's election, an average of two voters in every three vote in her favor.

Mrs. Roosevelt is more popular with women than with men and more popular with low-income and middle-income voters than with the well-to-do. But there are majorities on her side in all parts of the country and among all classes of people.

What the Public Likes About Her

Their recurring comments give a picture of what the public likes:

"She lives a useful life and keeps busy."

"She sets a good example by encouraging worth-while things."

"She has changed the public's traditional idea of a President's wife, but it's all to the good."

Although national elections and public opinion surveys give a clear pattern of President Roosevelt's own popularity, today's Institute survey is probably the first indication on a Nation-wide scale of what the average American thinks of the President's wife.

Surprisingly, perhaps, the survey reveals that she is even more popular than the President.

The President received a little more than 62 per cent of the major party vote on election day, 1936. The vote was one of the most decisive victories in American history, and much of that election day popularity has been retained. This month an Institute survey showed 58 per cent of the voters approving him.

But the actual vote for Mrs. Roosevelt in today's survey, which was conducted in the same way as the Presidential survey, is sharply higher:

"Do you approve or disapprove of the way Mrs. Roosevelt has conducted herself as 'First Lady?'"

YES	67%
NO	33%

It is interesting to note that, on this basis, Mrs. Roosevelt has the approval of about 30,000,000 voters, while the President polled 27,500,000 in 1936.

Voters Criticize Her For Insurance Post

As Presidential majorities sometimes do, however, Mrs. Roosevelt's backers favor her in principle but desert her on a specific piece of policy. And the issue is one which Mrs. Roosevelt made herself:

How much independence should the wife and family of the President of the United States have in choosing their own activities, in business and otherwise?

The President's wife posed that question at a newspaper conference recently, after she had been criticized for accepting a position as a director on the board of her son James' insurance company, Roosevelt and Sargent, of Boston.

The Institute asked the same voters as above:

"Do you think the President's wife should engage in any business activity which interests her, if she doesn't do it for profit?" Almost three voters in four agreed that she should, the exact vote being 73 per cent yes, 27 per cent no.

In Boston itself a newspaperman put his opinion this way:

"People ought to remember that her private life is really more important than her official position. One is temporary and the other is permanent. Mrs. Roosevelt is doing the kinds of things she has always been interested in doing."

Some of these interests have included writing newspaper columns and magazine articles, broadcasting talks and speeches over the radio and sponsoring handcraft work, model housing and terpsichore.

But many of the voters drew the line at the actual post Mrs. Roosevelt recently accepted—that of director in her son's insurance company. The Institute questioned them as follows:

Mrs. Roosevelt has taken a position on the board of directors in her son's insurance company. Do you approve or disapprove of this?

The percentage of approval and disapproval are:

APPROVE	44%
DISAPPROVE	56%

This time many of the voters objected that Mrs. Roosevelt was "taking part in something outright commercial," that "Jimmy's insurance business already had too much publicity" or that "profit is involved." Not a few of the comments indicated that the insurance post is "a man's job" and that what would be permissible for the President's son would somehow be "not quite right" for the President's wife.

The Institute's popularity survey shows that Mrs. Roosevelt is in highest favor with women, in less favor with men. On the question of general approval or disapproval of Mrs. Roosevelt as First Lady the vote is:

	Approve	Disapprove
Men	62%	38%
Women	73	27

Mrs. Roosevelt has not only the strong approval of Democrats (i.e., those who voted for F. D. R. in 1936) but she also wins approval from a sizable bloc of Republicans:

	Approve	Disapprove
Democrats	81%	19%
Republicans	43	57

Like the President's, Mrs. Roosevelt's popularity is greatest with persons at the bottom of the income scale. But unlike the President, Mrs. Roosevelt has the approval of a majority of voters even in the upper-income group. The percentages in each group approving her are upper-income group, 54 per cent; middle group, 65 cent cent, and lower group, 76 per cent.

33,000,000 Hope to Visit World Fair

More Than 13,000,0 'Definitely' Sure of Attending New York Exhibit This Summer

By Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Jan. 15.—As the jutting, modernistic buildings of New York's World Fair are pushed toward completion on the fairgrounds of Flushing Meadow Park, within sight of Manhattan skyscrapers, a Nation-wide check by the American Institute of Public Opinion indicates that approximately 33,000,000 Americans are hoping to attend the fair, some time after its opening on April 30.

The survey gives an indication, as of January 1, of the size of World's Fair traffic that may flow into New York from all parts of the United States next spring, with possible complications for rail, air and bus lines and for New York's hotel and tourist industries.

Should all 33,000,000 actually attend, they would form a tourist army larger than the entire population of most European countries, and they would probably set a record for world fairs in this country. Many visitors, as well as New Yorkers, are counted on to see the exhibits more than once.

Does Not Include Foreign Visitors

The Institute's survey was confined to the United States, moreover, and does not indicate the number of Canadians, Europeans and other foreign visitors who may be expected to visit "The World of Tomorrow" some time between April 30 and October 31.

While 33,000,000 Americans are hoping to see the fair, about 13,400,000 are "definitely" sure of coming at the present time, the Institute estimates. More than half of them live in a radius of 100 or 200 miles of New York.

Much of the success of the fair will depend on the curiosity of Midwesterners, Southerners and others, and especially on the estimated 19,600,000 in all parts of the country who are not definite about their plans today.

Million Westerners Hoping to Come

The largest contingent of World's Fair visitors will, of course, come from the six Middle Atlantic States—New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and West Virginia—where the Institute survey estimates a total of 14,600,000 persons are hoping to attend.

The four States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Michigan may send another 5,700,000, and the 13 Southern States (Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma) may send about 5,600,000.

More than 1,000,000 Westerners are hoping to be there, the survey indicates, although most Western travelers will be heading toward the San Francisco World's Fair, held at the same time.

The Institute's estimates for all sections are as follows:

	Hoping to Attend N. Y. Fair
New England	3,400,000
Mid Atlantic	14,600,000
East Central	5,700,000
West Central	2,600,000
South	5,600,000
West	1,100,000
TOTAL	33,000,000

France Guards Colorful Lore

Paris (U.P.). — French provincial architecture, costumes and household goods soon will be assembled to give a broad panorama of national life in the National Folklore Museum, situated in the new Trocadero Palace now nearing completion.

The Trocadero already houses a fine Natural History museum, the Folklore museum being designed to supplement the compilation of visual French history by assembling the customs and daily habits of each of the distinct provinces.

Going from room to room the visitor will be able to see all the varied aspects of French life, from the fisherman's hut of Brittany to Alpine lodges, the Strasbourg burghers house to the Latin homes and costumes of Nice.

House Members Show Independence

By Robert C. Albright.

If evidence was lacking that this will be a coalition Congress, it was abundantly supplied last week by the House.

And unless portends fail, indications that a Republican-Democratic combination will write much of the legislation of this session will be confirmed this week in the Senate.

For the deficiency relief bill offers a significant test of the tone of the new Congress.

First, it is an appropriation bill, and Congress loves to appropriate.

Second, it provides WPA projects for "back home" and no form of outside pressure on Congress is greater than local demands for these projects and jobs.

Third, the President plainly asked Congress to keep hands off the $875,000,0000 he said was necessary to continue Federal relief for the next five months.

All three considered, it was little short of a miracle the House trimmed the bill $150,000,000, however insignificant the saving may be in terms of a $9,000,000,000 budget.

A coalition of Democrats who believe Congress should start shaving the budget, and Republicans who believe Congress should deeply slash it, made the trick possible.

It was not a coalition against the President, though it was inevitably interpreted as such, and Republicans like to so view it. It was a coalition against WPA relief policies of the past, a vote of protest against politics in relief, and a gesture against heavy spending.

And as the first piece of Administration legislation to move before the new Congress, it was a clear assertion in this instance of legislative independence of the executive branch—independency to which the President recently asserted Congress is entitled.

The coalition which moved against the $875,000,000 appropriation was new in recent House history. Conservative Democrats and Republicans in the Senate repeatedly have coalesced, but it just hasn't happened in the House except on such spontaneous rebellions as last session welled up overnight against the reorganization bill.

But this combination in restraint of spending was carefully pre-

The strenuous life, so much a part of the Roosevelt heritage, was introduced into the regime of First Lady when the present mistress of the White House assumed the position. The duties performed by her predecessors fill only a small part of Mrs. Roosevelt's time. Continually on the go—making use frequently of airplanes to speed her travels—she has in six years actually visited every section of the land. Moreover, she has studied social and economic conditions wherever she has been—on the farm, in the mines, at welfare centers, in the slums. What she has seen she has reported to the public in public addresses, in radio broadcasts, in newspaper columns and books. The traditional idea of a First Lady's job is not hers. But if precedent is left behind, the public's favor is decidedly not, as is shown in today's poll.

How Mrs. Roosevelt's Popularity Compares With the President's

Month-by-month for nearly four years the American Institute of Public Opinion has measured the popularity of President Roosevelt. The following figures show how the President's popularity in the most recent survey (January 8) compares with that of Mrs. Roosevelt in today's survey:

	Percentage Favoring Mrs. Roosevelt	Pres. Roosevelt
National Vote	67%	58%

New England States	66%	51%
Middle Atlantic States	72	57
East Central States	64	55

The Dies Committee —And The New Deal

By Mark Sullivan

President Roosevelt, in his message to Congress, dwelt on dictatorships, attacked them, defended America against them. He did not name any one dictatorship. Between the lines one infers that Mr. Roosevelt had in mind one dictatorship especially, the German one.

The impression, implicit in Mr. Roosevelt's message to Congress, is borne out by other evidence. It is from Germany that Mr. Roosevelt has temporarily withdrawn our Ambassador, under conditions which give the action the color of criticism of Germany. It is against Germany that a member of the Cabinet, Mr. Ickes, makes a provocative speech.

Mr. Roosevelt's attitude is fully justified. The Nazi dictatorship of Germany is odious to American sentiment. The whole Nazi-Fascist type of society and government, as practiced in Germany, Italy and Japan, and as most aggressively exemplified just now in Germany—this type of dictatorship is repugnant to our American conception of society and government. The practices of Naziism shock America. So far as the President is a spokesman of American thought, his attitude toward Germany expresses American thought accurately.

Germany Sticks Out Its Neck

There is reason, too, for Mr. Roosevelt's present singling out of Naziism, his emphasis on it. Among the dictatorships, it is Naziism which at the moment sticks out its neck, which is the most active and blatant. And Naziism, at this time, is the form of collectivism and authoritarian government which seeks to expand, not only by propaganda but by arms. At the present time it is Naziism that is the most active, belligerent menace to democracies. Among the dictators it is, just now, Hitler who, continually, blurts out scorn of democracies, defiance of them.

But it would be a pity, and a serious misunderstanding of the true situation, if either Mr. Roosevelt or America, in the acuteness of their indignation against Naziism, should forget the other type of dictatorship, Russian communism. Russian communism would like just now to be forgotten. It has, for the time, pulled in its neck. The Russian home of communism aims, for the time, to lie low. (I say this of the Russian home of communism; I do not say it of communism in America—communism in America is eternally active). As Miss Dorothy Thompson

First Lady Begins 7th Year Active as Ever

By Emma Bugbee.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will arrive in a few days at the anniversary of her husband's second inauguration as President, and the end of another year of characteristic activity on her own part.

A review of the year shows no diminution of the physical energy which six years ago surprised a Nation unaccustomed to the independent comings and going of its First Ladies; no diminution of the zeal with which she speaks out in behalf of the underprivileged, of free speech, individual liberty and justice; no lessening of independence in her personal affairs, as shown by her acceptance of a position on the board of directors of the insurance company with which her son was formerly connected, and her defense at that time of the right of a President's wife and family to live their own lives.

In the last year, Mrs. Roosevelt's travels have attracted less attention than they did at first, for the public is becoming accustomed to them. That is why newspapers fail to record every small trip she makes, and the public begins to say she has not traveled so much.

A little checking, however, soon disproves this notion. The biggest item last year was a 9,000-mile lecture trip in the spring, in which she traveled from Washington to Texas, California and Seattle. In the fall she made virtually the same trip in reverse, flying from New York to Seattle, and back via California and Texas, visiting her children. In addition, she made two trips to Minneapolis, where her son James was a patient in the Mayo Clinic, 5,268 miles; shorter trips to Portland, Me., Lexington, Ky., Columbus, Ohio, each more than 1,000 miles. The largst single item in her mileage, however, is the "commuting" between New York or Hyde Park and Washington, each trip reckoned roughly as 600 miles. There were at least 15 of these "on the record," a total of 9,000 miles, with side jaunts upstate.

There were also shorter excursions, usually by automobile, from Washington, reaching such points as Arthurdale, W. Va., site of her favorite homestead colony in Charleston, W. Va.; Hampton or Charlottesville, Va., where her son Franklin, a student at the University of Virginia Law School, was living with his bride, the former Ethel duPont. The record also includes the 1,000 mile trip in June to Nahant, Mass., where the youngest son of the family, John Aspinwall Roosevelt, married Miss Ann Clark. The total mileage of all these trips is well over 42,000; a figure that has remained nearly constant during the last six years.

The mileage on the automobile which Mrs. Roosevelt herself drives on shorter jaunts around Washington and Hyde Park shows 12,196 miles since June, but part of this must be subtracted from her record. For the trip back from Florida after Thanksgiving, friends drove the car to the White House, while Mrs. Roosevelt treated herself to her first ocean voyage since her husband became President, a week-end sail from Jacksonville to New York.

We find that Mrs. Roosevelt apparently delivered fewer speeches in 1938 than previously. Again the newspapers now print less about her speeches than they did six years ago. The total is about 85, as contrasted with 100 the year before. This includes her formal lecture tours twice a year, for which she is paid, and her remarks at public dinners, conventions, and on the radio for which she is not paid.

Mrs. Roosevelt's mail has increased during the year to a total of 96,423 items. Of this number 10,000 were personal or social and answered by herself or by her personal secretaries in the White House. The rest were opened and handled by the Social Bureau, a distinct staff which is housed in the Executive Office and handles the vast bulk of letters of a non-personal nature, asking for information about the Government bureaus or how to get a job. Mrs. Roosevelt has had so much mail and the public seems still to be so curious about it that she added to her lecture repertory this season a talk on what her mailbag offers each day.

The year 1938 had its picturesque and comic moments. Outstanding among these was the picnic for the Crown Princess Louise of Sweden, who ate hot dogs with the President and his family at Hyde Park. Another tradition-breaker was the moment at the World Fair Grounds last summer when Mrs. Roosevelt introduced her husband to the convention of the National Education Association—the first time that a President of the United States had been presented by his wife at a public meeting. Mrs. Roosevelt had

International Kaleidoscope: Correspondence From Foreign Capitals

Isolated, China Can Still Fight

Cutting Off Supplies Does Not Check Effectiveness of Hit-and-Run Tactics

(This is the second and concluding article presenting the amazing story of the Chinese army, written by an Associated Press war correspondent who has covered the fighting since the beginning of the conflict with Japan. China, though virtually isolated from the rest of the world, so far as supplies are concerned, and driven to the interior, is still equipped—with its hit and run tactics—to check the Japanese.

By an Associated Press War Correspondent.

Kweillin, Kwansi, Southwest China—Japan's imminent atempt to cut the last Chinese transportation routes to the outside world has raised the question of whether China, without foreign supplies, will be able to continue its resistance.

The answer is yes—and here is a picture of the situation:

With Japanese warships standing guard outside all the Chinese seaports the only important outlets are the northwest highway to Russia and southwest routes through French Indo-China and British Burma.

The French are already complying half-heartedly with the Japanese request to restrict the inflow of Chinese munitions. The British have ignored all Japanese appeals, but the highway through Burma to the Chinese Province of Yunnan will not be completed for heavy traffic before March, 1939, and even then the trucking costs will be extremely high.

The principal foreign supplies which China has used during the war are heavy munitions and gasoline. To fight as a hermit army the Chinese forces must ultimately give up their heavy artillery, tanks, air force, and most of their motorized transport.

The Chinese general staff is not much worried about the three basic needs of an unmechanized army—food, clothing and light ammunition. China's food production for 1938 showed an increase of more than 10 per cent over the previous five-year average, thanks to favorable weather, a reduction of cotton acreage and the increased use of barren hills.

The supply of small arms ammunition for rifles, pistols and machine guns is now estimated by various authorities to be sufficient for six months to one year of continued fighting. Russian trucks are still bringing ammunition into northwest China and a large shipment of German cartridges reached China through Indo-China after the fall of Hankow.

Have Enough Supplies for 2 Years

This supply, together with the feeble output of the Chinese arsenal, is considered adequate for at least two years of mobile warfare. The guerrillas in North China have already demonstrated that when rifle ammunition is low, the Japanese can be attacked with home-made hand grenades, broad swords and 8-foot spears all smelted from the farmers' rice kettles. In surprise attacks at close quarters, especially on mountainous roads, these weapons have proved superior to standard rifles.

Gasoline for Chinese motor trucks will be the most serious loss if the Chinese army is completely isolated. Approximately 8,000 American and German motor trucks—80 per cent gas engines and 20 per cent Diesel motors—are now carrying Chinese army supplies. The substitution of pack animals, mule carts and camels will mean a slowing down of the whole process of war, especially the execution of counter attacks.

The conclusion on China's military supply problem seems obvious—that complete isolation cannot impede the mobile tactics which the Chinese forces are now adopting, but will seriously handicap any large scale operations to dislodge the Japanese army from the railways.

Medical Service Inefficient

China's medieval army medical service has shown but slight improvement during the months of warfare despite a broadside of criticism from both Chinese and Western civilian doctors. Behind the Kiangsi front an American observer recently counted 1,200 Chinese wounded, limping and crawling along the motor road toward a base hospital unassisted by first-aid men or ambulances.

A few miles north of Nanchang, the capital of Kiangsi, a government official was distributing $10 in Chinese currency (U. S. $1.70) to each man, which quitted the army of any further responsibility toward its wounded. If they chose to go to an army hospital, they would be treated and sent back to the front. But if their wounds proved too serious for further combat service, these service men were turned out upon the street among the thousands of refugees, without any hope of livelihood.

Among the 216,000 workers in the Chinese medical corps only 6,800 are classified as "doctors," the rest being nurses, dressers and coolies acting as stretcher bearers.

The only competent surgical treatment given to the Chinese wounded is provided by the Chinese Red Cross and the missionary hospitals, whose units are located from 30 to 200 miles behind the front lines.

The Chinese national health director told the Associated Press that he had personally examined the drugs used in a dozen army units and found them to be 95 per cent quackery. Corruption among the army medical personnel partly accounts for the inadequate funds available for the treatment of wounded soldiers, according to the health director.

Until Chinese government leaders are willing to pay higher salaries to army doctors, and to clean out the medieval bureaucrats directing the medical service the conditions among the Chinese wounded will remain at the present level.

Masses Cheer Daladier, but Parliament May Oust Him

Premier Losing Support in Chamber of Deputies as Popular Front Gains; He May Decide on Bold Move and Dissolve Legislature

By John Elliot.

Special Cable to The Post.

Paris, Jan. 14.—Premier Edouard Daladier returned to Paris from his tour of North Africa with greatly enhanced prestige and popularity. The French Premier, who was cheered by the crowds in September for surrendering to the Germans at Munich, is today hailed by them for proclaiming resistance to the Italians at Tunis.

In many respects Daladier faces 1939 in a strong position. He has won notable victory in breaking the general strike and has thus solidified his reputation as the "strong man of France." The decree laws of his brilliant finance minister, Paul Reynaud, have put the country once more on the road to economic prosperity and financial confidence. The budget has been passed by the end of the year in record time with majorities that with one exception never fell below 100. Finally the firm stand that Foreign Minister Georges Bonnet has taken against Fascist Italy's claims to a share of France's colonial empire contrasts favorably with the same statesman's abandonment of Czecho-Slovakia last summer.

Daladier is probably stronger in the country, however, than he is in parliament. The man, who is acclaimed as the saviour of his country in the provinces, is liable to be thrown out of office ignominiously at any moment by the Chamber of Deputies which has just reassembled for the winter session. The Socialists and Communists are eager to avenge the defeat that French labor sustained on November 30.

Strong as he is in the country Daladier has no stable majority in parliament. He has broken the Popular Front by his modification of the forty-hour week. Only the support of the Right enabled him to put his budget through parliament last month, but the Nationalists demand a price for their support in the future and that is a reform of the electoral law which will institute proportional representation in elections to the Chamber. The radicals, with Daladier as their leader, refused a few weeks ago to accept this reform.

Is Popular Front Still Powerful?

Furthermore, many Left Wing radical deputies who owe their election to the Chamber in 1936 on the second ballot to Socialist and Communist support are becoming restive at the notion of being aligned with the conservatives against the Left. This feeling was shown this week by two significant events in the Chamber.

The first was the re-election of Jacques Duclos, communist, as vice president of the Chamber. The second was the vote of the Chamber committee for an amnesty for all workers who quit their jobs during the general strike despite the government's demand that sanctions be taken against them.

Former Premier Leon Blum sees in these votes proof that Popular Front sentiment is still powerful and that Daladier is trying to swim against the current in seeking to rule with the aid of the right.

So it would not be at all surprising, therefore, if the Daladier government were to be defeated in the Chamber in the course of the next few weeks. The ordinary procedure for a French ministry in these circumstances would be to resign, but Daladier may have a surprise for his opponents. He is credited with entertaining the idea of dissolving parliament and calling new elections. In the ordinary course of events the next parliament elections would not take place until the spring of 1940.

The French premier has the right to dissolve parliament with the consent of the president and the Senate. Only one French president, Marshall MacMahon, tried this in 1877, but his action was so unpopular that it has never been repeated since.

Parliament's Prestige Low

The prestige of the parliamentary institutions here is at a low ebb just now, however, and it is possible that Daladier might be returned with a big majority if he adopted this bold course. For the popularity of the French premier in the country just now is in inverse ratio to that of the French Parliament.

The French, surrounded by dictators who are casting envious eyes on French territory, feel the need of a strong and stable government which can speak with authority. The French Chamber, where shifting majorities have been known to upset as many as a dozen cabinets in a year, with rare exceptions has prevented the Third Republic from having such a government. By an appeal to the country Daladier might be able to capitalize his prestige and obtain a Chamber with a majority so big in his favor that he could govern France with an authority no French statesman has wielded since the days of Raymond Poincare.

Britain Tries To Find Job For Windsor

Exiled Duke May Be Brought Home as Part of 'National Unity' Program

By Joseph Driscoll.

Special Cable to The Post.

London, Jan. 14.—The British government, which has been active in trying to solve the problem of refugees from other countries, may get around in the near future to doing something to end the exile of the world's most famous refugee, the Duke of Windsor. Already, those who specialize in anticipating news are suggesting that the government should put the Duke to work as deputy speaker and cornerstone layer for King George VI, or as Ambassador to the United States or Governor General of Canada.

The duke, chafing at enforced idleness along the Riviera, would leap at an opportunity to represent Britain at Washington, and the prospect of going there would be equally attractive to the duchess from Baltimore. The present Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay, who is 61, is planning to retire. He was to have given up the Embassy with the signing of the Anglo-American trade pact, but he has been persuaded to return to Washington until after the state visit of King George and Queen Elizabeth next June.

Accomplished public speaker that he is, having overcome his youthful nervousness, which took the form of cravat clutching, the Duke of Windsor is well qualified to present the British viewpoint to America. If anyone can make the British foreign policy intelligible and appreciated across the Atlantic, perhaps the duke could. Besides, the duke has been to the States before as the Prince of Wales and he knows something of the country and its people.

Tradition Against His Appointment

On the other hand, there are a number of reasons why the duke probably will never go to Washington as British Ambassador. The first and foremost is tradition. The others don't matter so much if tradition can be overcome. There is no precedent for the appointment of a royal prince, and a former king at that, to be His Majesty's Ambassador to the Great American Democracy.

Tradition would be less upset if the Duke of Windsor were dispatched to Canada. After all, his grand-uncle, the Duke of Connaught, served as Governor General of Canada; and the Duke of Kent is to be Governor General of Australia.

However, the one spot where the Duke of Windsor is most needed is right home here in England, as deputy and filler-in for his successor to the throne. It is well known that King George has to guard his health carefully. Yet he is constantly in demand to lay corner-stones, open bazaars, inspect commercial expositions, tour the slums and do 1,001 other tiresome chores that go with the routine business of being a constitutional monarch.

The Duke of Kent, who resembles the Duke of Windsor in many respects, including his speaking ability, has filled in for King George on numerous occasions, but he will no longer be available after November, when he moves to Australia.

With the Duke of Kent leaving England for several years there should be an opportunity for the Duke of Windsor to come home and do his bit. The fact that Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain paid his respects to the duke in Paris and permitted him a reunion with the Duke of Gloucester, has been followed by other signs that soon the prodigal prince will be forgiven and invited home.

Return Would Aid 'National Unity'

"National Unity" is the current slogan of the Chamberlain government, and the repatriation of the Duke of Windsor could be interpreted to the people as a move toward that unity of the nation at a time when complete harmony is essential to repel the menaces of war, unemployment and class warfare.

"Would you like the Duke and Duchess of Windsor to make their home in England?" was a question recently put to a cross-section of the people by the British Institute of Public Opinion. Of those who answered, 61 per cent said yes, 16 per cent said no, and 23 per cent had no opinion. It was noted that the wealthy section of the population was least enthusiastic about having the duke and duchess back.

"It may be that the wealthy, representing, in the main, the governing and conservative classes, fear that the duke's return would prove a disturbing factor," commented the London News Chronicle, which printed the survey figures. This leading Liberal daily remarked that the "unemployed and those who are too close to the bread line still remember the very genuine and practical sympathies which the duke had for them both as Prince of Wales and King—sympathies expressed in his social work and his visits to the distressed areas."

The "unofficial" radio, press and newsreel boycott on the Duke of Windsor begun by the Baldwin government, is gradually breaking down under the friendlier Chamberlain administration.

Nazi Paper's Premature Release Gives Away Plan for Ukraine

By the Associated Press.

Published Story About New State Spoils Campaign

By Ralph Barnes.

Special Cable to The Post.

Berlin, Jan. 14.—Adolf Hitler's plans to use the newly created autonomous province of Ruthenia within Czecho-Slovakia as a base for the establishment of an "independent" Ukrainian state with a population of 45,000,000 were disclosed recently in a thinly veiled manner by the Schlesische Zeitung of Breslau, Germany's biggest city close to the frontiers of the areas inhabited by the Ukrainian peoples.

It now seems that the Schlesische Zeitung let the cat out of the bag too soon, and it is not unreasonable to believe that this Nazi organ's editors have heard about the matter from high quarters. Widely noted in the press of Great Britain, France and other countries, the editorial created such a stir in European chancelleries as to cause, in turn, much distress in the Wilhelmstrasse. Under instructions from the German Foreign Office, the official news agency issued a commentary seeking to minimize the significance of the article and charging that its contents were being used by anti-Nazi quarters abroad in their "campaign of incitement" against the Third Reich.

Among other points, the German agency asserted that a map accompanying the editorial showing the approximate area which a state built up of the bulk of the Ukrainian people would include was reprinted from Le Matin, of Paris. However, the map is credited neither to the French newspaper nor to any other source in the Schlesische Zeitung. Incidentally, the shaded area on the map indicates the Crimea, despite the fact that this Soviet territory is inhabited chiefly by Great Russians and Tartars and is not included in the Soviet Socialist Republic of the Ukraine, one of the federated republics of the U. S. S. R.

Nazi Press Belligerent

Despite the reproof to the Schlesische Zeitung, the Nazi press continues almost daily to discuss in an aggressive manner the question of "Freedom for the Ukraine." They may in general be more cautious than was the Breslau paper, but there is ample evidence that the Nazi leadership is going forward steadily with its plans to establish a vassal state, using Ruthenia as a base.

Fomentation of unrest among Ukrainians everywhere is a primary feature of the first and current stage. The question as to whether Hitler will in the end be prepared to engage in open warfare with Russia to help "free" the Soviet Ukraine cannot yet be answered. One point is clear; up to the final stages, at least, Nazi official quarters will deny flatly that they have any but the most indirect interest in the creation of a Ukrainian state.

The Schlesische Zeitung's editorial was printed on December 14, occasioned by the report of the first statement of fundamental policy by the Czecho-Slovak government to Parliament since the Munich crisis. The text of the editorial follows:

"The first government declaration given before the Prague Parliament of the new state of Czechs, Slovaks and Carpatho-Ruthenians was undoubtedly of great importance to the two first-named nationalities of the reconstructed republic on the Moldau. But, after all, it is for them only a new, if decisive, chapter in their national life. This day means more, much more, for the third group, the Carpatho-Ruthenians. For them it means the realization that for the first time in centuries—with the exception of a short and chaotic episode 20 years ago—the Ukrainians have become a nation, bearing part of the burden of a state and owning a small but real territory on which they are their own masters. And this much is certain: the Carpatho-Ukraine, whatever the future may bring, within the last few weeks has become the spiritual heart of a nation of 45,000,000 people.

Piedmont of The Ukraine

"It may be premature and perhaps too far-fetched an historical parallel to call the sparse woodland of the Carpathians the 'Piedmont of the Ukraine.' But, on the other hand, it must be recognized that this idea (of Ukrainian nationality) is alive, at least in certain districts where Ukrainians live, including the republic on the Moldau. In Prague, the political center of the state, the periodical, Ukrajinske Aktuality, is now being published to discuss this problem.

"The language of this publication, which doubtless is at least close to official persons, is not ambiguous. It says: 'The Ukrainian nation's road of suffering goes back to the World War. Millions of Ukrainians died of hunger in the Soviet Union while bolshevik commissars shipped thousands of wagonloads of Ukrainian wheat to foreign countries in order to obtain money for Communist propaganda. Hundreds of thousands of national-minded Ukrainians were shot or deported to Siberia. Notwithstanding this 20-year reign of terror, the Ukrainian nation's will to live was not broken. The treatment accorded Ukrainians in Poland is generally known. Now, more than ever in the last 20 years, the problem of Ukrainian nationality has become center of European interest. This problem must be solved now! There are two ways of solving it: either by forming an autonomous Ukrainian state with the consent of the Ukrainian nation or by dismembering it temporarily against the people's will. The interests of European peace and civilization demand the first solution; the creation of an independent Ukrainian state.

"But even outside the Czecho-Slovak-Ukrainian union of states there is resentment wherever Ukrainians dwell. In Poland the Sejm (the parliament) was taken by surprise by the demand of the Ukrainian deputies for cultural and territorial autonomy as guaranteed by the constitution. At the same time, it is known that Lemberg, cultural center of Ukrainian nationalism in Poland, has become the scene of violent discussions between Poles and Ukrainians. In this connection it may be stated as a fact that these demands for autonomy represent only the minimum program of moderate groups, and that the militant, terroristic O. U. N. (Ukrainian Military Organization) believes that its hour also has struck. It is significant that the Carpatho-Ruthenian guards took the name "Konowakts (sic) Guard" (Col. Eugene Knovaletz, former leader of the Ukrainian Military Organization, was murdered last May in Amsterdam), showing their affinity with those who 20 years ago attempted to unite those parts of the present Poland inhabited by Ukrainians to a Ukrainian state.

Reich Officials Deny Direct Interest In Rich Area

Other Ukrainians Resentful?

The social structure of Polish Ukrainian nationalism in itself is hardly favorable to terrorism. An almost 100 per cent farming population, economically better situated than many other sections of the Polish agricultural community, possessing flourishing co-operatives and deeply religious, these people are anything but intellectual revolutionaries. But the same characteristics also enable the Ukrainians to remain true to their nationality despite all attempts to denationalize them; the influence of the fanatically nationalistic Greek Orthodox clergy also must not be underrated. A moment which forces eastern affairs into a great movement would doubtless find them ready to defend their nationality, ready even to fight for the Ukrainian state.

"How easily things might come to a head in the zone between the Carpathians and the Don is shown by the news from the Soviet Ukraine. We do not know how many groups of people's commissars have already been liquidated in Khiev and Kharkov. But while in other parts of the Soviet Union the pretext for the great purges has been usually a deviation from the party line to the right, semi-right, left, semi-left or the like, nationalism was always given as a reason for purges in the Ukraine. These commissars were certainly very strange 'nationalists,' but in a number of cases at least, especially where the army or teaching profession was involved, the actual reason was probably that the victims had grown more or less conscious of their Ukrainian nationality; that they were no longer willing to see this granary transformed into a hungry desert nor natives everywhere displaced by Bolshevik intellectuals from Moscow chiefly Jews.

Soviet Purges In Ukraine

"And just at this time comes explicit, surprisingly explicit, news from the bloody darkness of the Soviet Union that again dozens of high officers of Ukrainian nationality have been arrested by the G. P. U. in Khiev and other garrisons of the country, on the charge of preparing for the secession of the Soviet Ukraine and the erection of an independent Ukrainian state. Even the change in the leadership of the G. P. U. may be partly traced to the fact that Jeschow (sic.; Nikolai I. Yeshov, recently supplanted as head of the People's Commissariat of Internal Affairs, which includes the political police, formerly the G. P. U.) allowed such a dangerous nationalist Ukrainian conspiracy to grow without discovering it.

"We do not want to play the role of prophet. We only point out that today, more than ever before, the Ukrainians are conscious of their national state and that memories of the short but bitter struggle of 1919-1920—heroic despite its shortcomings—are still alive. In any case, if Europe does not wish to be surprised by developments whose extent cannot be foreseen today it should watch closely the movement in the territory between the river, the steppes, the sea and the Carpathians. It is certain, however, that the Ukraine will endure."

Anglo-Italian Talks End in A Stalemate

Both Sides State Their Views Frankly But No Concrete Results Are Achieved

By James M. Minifie

Special Cable to The Post.

ROME, Jan. 14.—The visit of Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain and Lord Halifax to Rome can best be appraised as a scoreless tie. This estimate is based necessarily on imperfect information, but it is the best that can be had until Chamberlain makes his report to Parliament.

It is borne out by the official British statement that "No new commitments, arrangements or agreements were either asked for or entered into by either side." This justifies the analogy of a drawn game, but it is not necesary to point out the effect that a draw may have for one side or the other in the series. It may be just as good as a victory. In diplomacy it is often better than an apparent victory.

One point already is clear: That both sides spoke with great frankness. Two factors appear to have impressed the British in Premier Benito Mussolini's remarks: His reiterated insistence on Italy's desire for peace, and the moderation with which he put forward Italy's claims in the Mediterranean. The impression was given that there was some severe self-control here, but nevertheless, his moderation produced its effect. But for the pertinacious work put in by the French beforehand, Chamberlain might well have found himself in the role of mediator between the French and Italians.

Italian points were made for increased rights for Italian settlers in Tunisia, better port facilities or possibly cession of territory in Djibouti and representation on the Suez Canal board. Such studiously moderated demands were different from those voiced so clamorously by the Italian press from Tunisia, Corsica and Djibouti. These demands, of course, never were made officially, but the relations between the press and the government in a totalitarian country are so close that what the press says often carries a semi-official standing.

French Relieved About Talks

An almost audible sigh of relief went up from the Palazzo Farnese, seat of the French Embassy, when it was learned that the Prime Minister had replied that this was no occasion for British mediation and that the best thing to do would be for the French and Italians to get together and thresh out their difficulties. He capped this by referring to the close ties between England and France—as strong in their way as the Rome-Berlin axis. The point of contact and disagreement may will be summarized in the much-worn phrase, "peace with justice." On the subject of peace both sides were agreed that it was greatly to be desired, but when it came to "justice" difficulties began to be evident. It is like two neighbors who may have exactly similar convictions about desirability of law and justice, but each is inclined to regard the law as established for his own benefit and justice as his own interpretation of that law.

If the British were unwilling to discuss the Franco-Italian dispute, Italians were equally loath to give too much weight to British anxiety about Spain. In the Italian view the war will soon be over, and when this has happened there would then be an evacuation of Italian troops, planes and materials and an end to the sinking of British ships by Italian planes operating from Majorca. Il Duce appears to have made it pretty plain, however, that there would be and could be no withdrawal until a victory had been won.

So far as is known, the results of the talks appear to have been largely negative. But negative virtues are not to be ignored. It probably would have been much less of a success if the talks had been so superficial or insincere that they failed to reveal divergencies which actually existed. To have brought these divergencies out into the open where they may be known and studied is a considerable achievement.

Chamberlain Cheered by Masses

Finally, the last thing which should be discounted in this era of personal rule is the personal appearance in Rome of the heads of the British government. Chamberlain made a definite and good personal impression on the people of Rome who turned out in increasing numbers to greet him. This was more significant if that popular feeling had been left to find its own level without the customary directed cheering. This was so much the case that there was not cheering at all except from the British colony. Left to themselves, the Romans gave Chamberlain a tribute in their instinctive and traditional salute, a burst of hand-clapping.

Put on the lowest basis, the personal impression made by the visit makes it more difficult for Italy and England to be involved in a war in the near future. The personal approval given to the head of the state is inevitably extended by the state.

The results of the visit however seem to have been a disappointment for the Italians. A press campaign had been worked up which represented the British as falling in little by little, with Italian "legitimate aspirations—reasonable claims—and finally their "inalienable rights" in regard to France. The news has not yet been broken to the public that England has declined to recognize the "justice" of their claims against France. The official communique does not bring this out.

St. John's College Program Aims to Develop Thinking Students

Educators Strive for 'Free Mind'

Hold Ignorance of 'Educated' Men Cause for Many Of Today's Ills

By Hedley Donovan.

Thirty miles east of the Capital 60 young men today are subjects of an experiment which its sponsors believe may prove as fateful for this republic as any innovation proposed by statesmen on the Hill.

The term "experiment" is not in favor, however, among the men responsible for the curriculum at St. John's College, in Annapolis, Md. Their program is experimental only in the sense that no American college has tried it in the twentieth century. The program appears new, they contend, only because our colleges have forgotten the means and meaning of a true liberal education.

St. John's College today proposes to teach men how to think. That is a substantial order, the college authorities realize, but they consider it the only legitimate aim of a liberal education. They do not promise students an income of $5,000 at the age of 35, but instead hold out the hope of a "free mind."

Feel Nation Needs "Free Minds"

Without free minds, they say, the Nation can never preserve its freedom. The architects of the Republic were men of liberal education, and St. John's insists that their work can survive only as long as the same time-tested, but lately neglected, principles of education prevail. Many ills of the American body politic St. John's attributes to the ignorance of "educated" men, confronted with a governmental system devised by and for citizens able to think clearly and express their ideas forcefully.

Higher education in this country has become hopelessly cluttered, according to the men on the shaded campus in Annapolis, by the complicated mechanism of credit hours, majors and minors. Thousands of "bachelors of arts" are annually loosed upon the Nation unable to speak, write or think effectively, but confident of vocational "success." The contemporary system of elective courses, enabling the student to choose his own subjects, is called "cafeteria education" at St. John's, and the result is described as chaos.

The answer from St. John's is best described as a revival of the classical curriculum. Its aim, in the words of President Stringfellow Barr, is to give the student "a solid, balanced, general education as the proper basis for whatever he might do or study later on." Sinews of the St. John's programs are books, but only "great books" and roughly 100 of them.

The List of Great Books

The list of great books, built up by Dr. Barr and various associates over a period of 20 years, leads from Homer's "Iliad" to "Projective Geometry," by Veblen and Young. The latter, incidentally, is one of only four American works on the roll. The others are the Constitution, the "Federalist" papers, and William James' "Principles of Psychology." St. John's offers no apology for this apportionment. Like it or not, the superpatriots are reminded that the origin of this country's culture is European, and the St. John's list attempts to compass this vast heritage.

Nearly a quarter of the volumes come from Greece and ancient Rome, but more than 40 are contributions of the last 200 years. The average American college graduate might have read all or part of a dozen of the books, and heard of perhaps 75 on the list.

The St. John's student must read and understand them all. He can no more skip the "Electra" of Euripides than Fourier on "Mathematical Analysis of Heat." The college insists that undergraduates go direct to the classics that have worked a decisive influence on the main stream of European thought, rather than consult books about the great books, or even books about the books about the great books. The Randall Hall bulletin board last week carried one student's appeal for return of his copy of St. Augustine's "Confessions," Volume II. But the lost and found notices revealed no missing copies of "Introductory Survey of Classic Literature," because no such textbooks are in use at St. John's.

Students Are Average Americans

The 60 students now exposed to this new-old educational program, all freshmen and sophomores, apparently find no conflict between the development of "free minds" and the accepted behavior patterns of their fellow Americans 18 to 20 years old.

An impatient student shouts up two flights of stairs in the freshman dormitory. "Hey, do you guys want us to be late for the first show?" The first show, it turns out, is "Thanks for Everything." Down the corridor someone is singing "You Must Have Been a Beautiful Baby." And out on the front steps, where half a dozen lads are loitering, the mention of two sisters from Baltimore introduces the staple of all male conversation.

The college officials would doubtless be the first to be disturbed if the "St. Johnnies," in their moments of relaxation, could talk of nothing but Aeschylus and Ovid. Dean Scott Buchanan is worried, in fact, because the student body "seems so submissive and docile."

The unnatural tranquillity of the student body was revealed, Dr. Buchanan recalls, in its reaction to two vital changes of policy decreed by the administration last November, changes which would have provoked vigorous protests on almost any American campus. The first was an announcement, a few days before the homecoming football game, that 1938-39 is to be St. John's last season in intercollegiate athletics.

Will Set Up "House" Plan

Some sentimental alumni were distressed at the abrupt conclusion to a long record of athletic endeavor, not without its memorable chapters, but more realistic students apparently felt that recent years, with St. John's enrollment hovering around 150, have added no luster to the record. In any case, there was no coherent protest from the student body. Dr. Barr announced a full program of intramural sports for 1939-40, with emphasis on six-man football, tennis, fencing, basketball, badminton and water sports.

Within a few days of the formulation of the new athletic policy Dr. Barr served notive that the college next fall will take over the quarters of the five fraternities on the campus for general use as dormitories, with a view eventually to setting up on a small scale the "house" plan in vogue at Harvard and Yale. The Greek letter societies for years had enjoyed the use of college property, but complaints from Annapolis townspeople of undue festivity in the fraternity houses, and failure of the clubs to enforce disciplinary action of their own, led to the college ruling.

St. John's is not outlawing fraternities, Dean Buchanan emphasized, and there is nothing to prevent them from renting their own club rooms in the town. He is uncertain, however, whether the societies can show enough "initiative" to survive without the present subsidy from the college.

Students Like Courses of Study

One autumn morning shortly after these two announcements, the red flag, complete with hammer and sickle, was observed flying from the college flagpole and several basement windows in McDowell Hall had been smashed. "I thought that might be the beginning of a revolt," Dean Buchanan said, "but it turned out just to be a beer party. The students sulked a little about the fraternity question, and then seemed to forget the whole thing pretty quickly."

Apparent lack of morale, also evidenced by complete lassitude of the student council, seems to be confined to the realm of organized extracurricular activity. More than a dozen students interviewed by The Post expressed keen enthusiasm for their course of study, which they consider clearly superior to the "old program."

The old program, with subjects divided by departments and separate courses and credits offered the student for his choosing, is still the plan for study for approximately half St. John's enrollment of 125. The presence of these old program students and the college's obligation to offer them the type of curriculum prevailing at the time of their matriculation, has placed St. John's in a trying period of transition.

When Dr. Barr assumed the presidency in 1937, the new program, the integrated four-year course built around the 100 books, was set up as an alternative to the usual curriculum of the smaller colleges. Nearly half the freshman class in the fall of 1937 elected to embark on the new program. A year ago St. John's became definitely committed to the new program and it was decided to offer no other to the entering freshmen of 1938.

With graduation exercises in the spring of 1941, therefore, the old program will be liquidated, and the entire energies of faculty and administration will be concentrated on the only plan they believe capable of producing a liberal education. Meanwhile, ten faculty members work exclusively with the old program, ten with the new and another ten under both plans.

Last year five old plan students, one of them a senior, were so impressed by the new program they decided to sacrifice their accumulated credits and return to St. John's as freshmen in September, 1938.

Elements of a Liberal Education

The new program (despite their protests that the idea is by no means "new," college officials have not yet discovered a more feasible label for the course) proceeds from the theory that Faraday's "Experimental Researches into Electricity" cannot be understood without previous mastery of Euclid's "Elements of Geometry," that Rousseau's "Social Contract" must be considered in connection with Plato's "Republic," that mathematics and science are as essential for a liberal education as philosophy, languages and literature, all contributing harmoniously to the development of a thinking man.

The freshman tackles the Greeks from the list of 100 great books, 19 in all. A vital assumption of the plan is that all the members of the class are considering the same problems at the same time, bringing their varied reactions into seminars and tutorials. Two-hour seminars, devoted to round-table discussion of one or two of the "great books," always bring together about 15 students and 2 to 4 faculty members twice a week.

The student hears an average of three formal two-hour lectures every two weeks on the texts of books from the list. Groups of five students daily attend one-hour tutorials in both mathematics and languages. The language tutorials occupy three months in intensive drill on fundamentals of grammar, and move on the second term to translation. The listed books are studied in English, but the training in languages is intended to illuminate discussion of these classics, as well as to teach the student more of his own language and its use.

Moving through the great books chronologically, the student takes up the Roman and medieval writers in his sophomore year, with Latin as his language study. The junior year, which the pioneer class of 1941 will enter in September, concentrates on the classic authors of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. French is the accompanying language. The fourth year will carry the student from Voltaire up to Freud, while German occupies his language tutorial.

Throughout the four-year course the student spends an average of two and a half hours a week in laboratories, classified as three types, "mathematics and measurement," "experimentation" and "combination of scientific findings." He begins by learning to demonstrate for himself the basic principles of mathematics, and later repeats—to the greatest possible extent with equipment he has devised himself — the crucial experiments of historic and contemporary science. Investigation of concrete problems, particularly those drawn from the medical sciences, completes the scientific training. It is not to be considered, however, as a separate "course," but as a closely co-ordinated phase of the general program pursued in seminars, tutorials and the undergraduate's own study.

Oral examinations play an important part in the St. John's program, and, supplemented by six hours of written tests at the end of each year, form basis of annual ratings for students under the new plan. Graduation requirements are simply stated:

"Knowledge of the contests of the required books in the course; competence of the liberal arts; a reading language in at least two foreign languages; competence in mathematics through the elementary calculus and 300 hours of laboratory science."

Discarded along with the elective machinery is the "progressive" doctrine that the student should decide for himself whether to attend any particular lecture or seminar. Attendance is compulsory and St. John's makes no effort to conceal the fact.

Dr. Barr, defending the necessity for a thorough academic discipline, has described as the "subtlest" of all attacks on a nation's freedom the policy of "letting me have all the information I want but seeing to it that my education is so defective I lack the intellectual capacity to interpret the information when I get it."

"We have slithered into the belief," he said in a radio address last summer, "that liberty meant being left alone, and nothing else. We have come to assume that liberalism is the absence of authority, because we can no longer distinguish between authority and tyranny. We have forgotten that the mind that denies the authority of reason falls under the tyranny of caprice . . . We have allowed totalitarian dictators to take out a copyright on words like authority and discipline, although their tyranny is a caricature of authority and their terrorism is a caricature of discipline."

Dr. Barr Urges True Discipline

True discipline, essential to the preservation of freedom, was uppermost in the minds of the men who founded St. John's in 1784, as Dr. Barr interprets their intentions. He likes to quote from the resounding college charter:

"Whereas, Institutions for the liberal education of youth in the principles of virtue, knowledge and useful literature are of the highest benefit to society, in order to train up and perpetuate a succession of able and honest men for discharging the various offices and duties of life, both civil and religious, with usefulness and reputation, and such institutions of learning have accordingly been promoted and encouraged by the wisest and best regulated States: Be it enacted . . ."

St. John's traces its origin to the founding of King William's School in 1696, antedated only by Harvard and William and Mary. It is no accident, according to the educators in charge, that the third oldest college in the country should have become the locale for the "new" program. That program is meant to be powerfully aided by the numerous reminders of continuity with the past which surround the undergraduate.

Decline of St. John's in 1920's

The Annapolis institution served Maryland and the Nation with distinction for 200 years. But in the twentieth century era of rapid collegiate expansion St. John's found itself drifting aimlessly, attempting to imitate with its limited resources the academic, athletic and extracurricular program of the Nation's large universities.

The decay was far advanced in the late 1920's. Three presidents held office from 1929 to 1937, failing to meet growing financial problems or maintain scholastic standards. The Association of American Colleges withdrew St. John's academic rating. Amos Woodcock, former prohibition director and last of St. John's presidents in this unhappy chronicle, proposed to balance the college budget by making the venerable institution co-educational. With the attraction of the nearby Naval Academy, it was suggested that St. John's could immediately double enrollment by opening its doors to women.

It was in those dark and by no means distant days, when the college's raison d'etre was becoming more and more obscure, that the board of visitors and governors determined to revive St. John's by reviving the classic conception of a liberal education. From the University of Chicago, where they had been associated with President Robert Hutchins in an endeavor to stimulate a classic revival in the Middle West, St. John's summoned Barr and Buchanan. They had first known each nearly 20 years before as Rhodes Scholars at Balliol College, Oxford, and later had been colleagues on the University of Virginia faculty.

Intellectual Climate Changes

In a brief 18 months the intellectual climate at St. John's has undergone notable change. The visitor senses vitality and direction in the attitude of faculty and students. He encounters no pretense, however, that St. John's has surmounted all its problems.

A faculty furnishing one teacher to every four students today absorbs approximately one-third of a $210,000 budget, while the college's regular sources of income, student fees and an annual grant from the Maryland Assembly, amount to only $140,000. The difference now is being met by donors who see a sound investment in the St. John's program of liberal education. An increase in student fees and a campaign for an endowment fund are under consideration as means of placing the college finances on a permanently stable basis.

Problems raised by simultaneous operation of the old and new plans inevitably will cause confusion for the next two yers. The cleavage in the student body is clear. The student paper recently ran a front-page "box" with the demand, "Let Thucydides Eat the Meat!" Author of the brief manifesto, an old-plan student, apparently cared for the meat in the college dining hall as little as for the historian of the Peloponnesian wars. But the same edition of the student paper gave five paragraphs on the front page to a lecturer's analysis of Homer's "Odyssey." The old-plan students, Dean Buchanan admits, are disquieted by realization that they are the last representatives of a dying regime. They feel vaguely "cheated," he says, although the college has guaranteed them completion of their education under the old program.

Emphasis will shift decisively to the new program next September. Miss Miriam Strange, registrar, anticipates enrollment of 70 freshmen. A proportionate transfer of faculty duties from the old to the new plan will follow.

The St. John's faculty is going to school these days, too, and putting in plenty of home work. Faculty members, in the St. John's theory, cannot adequately teach any 10 books on the list unless they know the other 90, if the liberal education is to be presented as an integrated body. Few of the faculty members had studied all the prescribed classics and none knew them in the St. John's context—as a list of 100 to be meditated. A House Appropriations sub-committee of seven Democrats and four Republicans determined the bill should be cut 17 per cent. This economy-minded group often has done the same thing before, only to be overridden by the full committee, and the House.

To the surprise of many, the full committee ratified the action of the smaller group, although the President's objections were carried to the meeting by Representative Cannon, of Missouri. Another Democrat, Representative Woodrum, of Virginia, just as vigorously expressed the sub-committee view. Woodrum won. He won not because committee Democrats supported him. He won because a combination of 11 Democrats and Republicans voted for his plan, against 12 Democrats who supported Cannon's.

When the bill reached the floor of the House, Woodrum's $725,000,000 won again. Again it won by a combination of Democratic and Republican votes. There was no record ballot. But from the gallery, reporters watched 107 Democrats and 119 Republicans stream past the tellers.

This was not coalition in any ominously political sense. It was not a joint effort by conservatives in both parties to sabotage an Administration proposal. Independent of ties, agreements or even that dark word, conspiracy, it was a majority of the members of the House voting their views. It was the legislative branch functioning as such.

Confirming this was the lively heckling and controversy that kept up between Democrats and Republicans within the coalition. Republicans accused Woodrum of trying to save the Administration's chestnuts. Woodrum accused Republicans of attempting to defeat the President's "humanitarian purposes." There was no common meeting of Democratic and Republican minds.

The President didn't get all he asked for. Republicans didn't cut the program to a third, as they tried to. But a coalition—incidentally the only type of coalition this Congress is likely to see—won a compromise.

Rep. Sumner Is Here With Quips Falling Everywhere—Principally on the New Deal

She'll Feel Bad If Democrats Don't Hurl Tomatoes

By Christine Sadler.

When "Judge" Jessie Sumner, of Iroquois County, Ill., was a pert young blonde studying law at Oxford, serious-minded English students got the habit of following her around with notebooks in hand—ready to jot down every glittering expression.

They thought they were compiling American slang. As a matter of fact, though, they were only making a collection of Sumnerisms. The newest and youngest feminine member of Congress does not go in for slang, but she is definitely quick on the uptake and can flip a phrase so fast it sizzles. In addition, her undaunted frankness is something people don't go looking for around the halls of Congress.

In Washington just two weeks, Representative Sumner finds herself already extensively quoted—not in the Congressional directory, but in newspapers and Capitol Hill conversation. Sumnerisms are piling up.

In her first interview, the new Republican Representative gave reporters a turn by declaring: "Don't ask me to say anything about President Roosevelt. I came to bury Caesar, not to praise him."

To the society editors who queried her concerning the dress she would wear to the Congressional reception Thursday night, she replied: "I'll be turned out in white and look like another Washington Monument."

Tilt With Louis Bromfield

The apex of her local fame to date, however, came when she turned to Author Louis Bromfield who kept heckling her during a speech at the National Woman's Press Club and remarked: "I think I should know you. I've seen your picture somewhere, but I didn't catch your name."

After their run-in made the headlines, "Judge" Sumners had nothing to take back. "I can't remember everybody who goes around writing love stories. I do recall starting to read something of his once in a magazine, but I never did finish it," she declared. "Political speeches are more to my liking."

To the columnists who bet she went home and cried, she retorted: "If I ever burst into tears it'll be on the bathroom scales."

Folks back home, elated that she had sailed into an enemy so quickly after she became a legislator, sent her clippings and letters by the dozen. :We're glad you told him a few things, even if he did once win the Pultizer Prize," they cheered.

"My, goodness," chuckled Miss Sumner, "was he a Pultizer Prize winner?"

When the new Congresswoman makes her first legislative speech, she neither expects nor wants a complete round of applause. "I'll feel terrible if the Democrats don't hurl a few tomatoes," she said last week.

After she has devoted a few weeks to "making friends"—an activity which comes natural to her—she hopes to test the theory that a new member of Congress is a comparatively powerless individual.

"We've always been told back home," she declared, "that a first-termer could do nothing, but they're expecting more of me than that. In fact," she said laughingly, they expected farm prices to pop right up when I got here."

Spent 14 Years Practicing Law

Barely 40 years of age and still a blonde, Representative Sumner was judge of Iroquois County, Ill., when she decided to make the race for Congress. A graduate of Smith College and the first American woman to study law at Oxford, she had 14 years of legal practice in New York, Chicago, and her home town behind her before she became judge. She took charge of her own campaign and made most of her campaign speeches. If she had known electioneering "to be so expensive" she probably would have forgotten her ambitions, she said.

All women's organizations were behind her and she received indorsements from various other groups, including the Non-Partisan League. She departed from "the old flattery methods" and struck out frankly, promising nothing but earnest work in behalf of good Government.

"I don't believe everybody wants to be patted on the back any more. I think they want to be talked to as if they were intelligent beings," she said. When she met with labor groups she picked their demands to pieces, assuring them they asked much to much. When she got a chance at "big business," she made a plea for labor.

Immediately upon her arrival in Washington she asked for a place on the agriculture committee. She is in favor of crop control and stabilization that would prevent "the program being changed every year in every county of the United States at great expense and trouble."

She announced that if she did not get a place on the agriculture committee she would "work in behalf of the farmers anyway." "I'm from a rural area, Uncle Joe Cannon's old district, in the central part of the country—and I believe the farm problem is one of the gravest facing us today," she declared.

She is also eager "to work to get bank examiners put under civil service." "All sorts of civil service reforms" are on her list of future endeavors. She thinks WPA workers should be put under civil service to "cut down WPA politics."

A thoroughgoing Republican, Miss Sumner hoots at the "present day so-called New Deal liberalism." She says:

"Like Cassandra, I have a feeling of impending doom every time I hear the word 'liberalism' mentioned. It's a wooden horse that has been pulled within our gates and if I have any hobby while I'm here, it will be riding it," she declared.

A uniform divorce law is also on the Sumner program, but she thinks South Carolina—with no divorce law—might be too big an obstacle to overcome in one session. A distant relative of hers

Blonde and Just 40 She Is Youngest Congresswoman

—Senator Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts, was caned over the head by a Southerner when he got mixed up in a sectional quarrel just before the Civil War, and "Judge" Sumner has no intention of letting any of her fights "cross the Mason and Dixon Line." She could do so legitimately if she chose, however; for her grandmother was a Cooper of Virginia.

Detests Idea Of Class System

She uses that grandmother as an illustration of her belief that America should never recognize a class system. During her early married life the grandmother did a man-sized job on an impoverished Illinois farm, but in her old age she went to Chicago and "became a grand dame again."

"It can still be done today," she declares. "I hate pessimism and I detest the thought that there needs to be a proletariat in this country. I hope we will not let such an albatross hang around our necks. Our forefathers left Europe to escape such things as proletariats, and we don't want them here."

The New Deal, in her opinion, has done much to develop and foster class consciousness in America. That's one of the big reasons she is against it—that and the deficit.

Despite her uncompromising Republican beliefs on several questions, Representative Sumner deplores the aisle which separates Democrats and Republicans in the House of Representatives. Statesmanship recognizes the value of voting for the best issue, regardless of party lines, she declares.

"There's one Democrat who is very popular just now, but I can never forgive him for coining that expression, 'To the victor belongs the spoils.' I think it is statesmanlike to come unrestricted to Congress, ready to vote for whatever you judge best after argument is presented," she says.

Already she has found that a Congresswoman is expected to give much time to letter writing and conferring with job applicants.

"I have no jobs to hand out and, frankly, I'm glad," she said. "Uncle Joe Cannon always said that a Congressman made 40 enemies every time he filled a vacancy and just one friend."

Wants to Stay Only if Useful

"I'll like it here, I'm inclined to believe, if I find I can be useful," she declares, "but I don't want to stay unless I can. I'm serious."

Played up as the "belle of the House," she asserted: "I don't want to be the belle. I want to be the bellwether."

"It's plain to see, though, just why I entered politics. It wasn't because I was a belle. I took one good look at myself long ago, and decided I had better try to be useful for I could never be ornamental."

When Representative Sumner gets up to speak, she hitches her hand into her dress belt much as the old-time politican did in his galluses. She has a good speaking voice and punctuates her remarks with Sumnerisms. Stopped for questions, she replied: "Go ahead. Grease the skids. I don't know how long I'll be here, anyway."

On Capitol Hill she is no more flustered by not knowing the rules and signals than she was by not knowing Louis Bromfield wrote "The Green Bay Tree." When she is out of her seat and a bell rings, she would just as soon ask a tourist "Is that a roll call" as anyone. To her, the important thing is to be there when the roll is taken and unlike many women—she does not pretend to be interested in "details" nor to know things just because others might think she should.

said the other day, Russia is at this time the most inscrutable portion of the earth's surface. For some reason, following out some policy we cannot guess, the Russian home of communism is just now quiescent. But no one should forget that the permanent purpose of Russian communism is to extend itself to embrace the world.

Nazism Is Product of Communism

To be indignant against Naziism, and forget communism, is to be indignant at a result while ignoring the cause. The terse history of the commotion that has bedeviled the world for 20 years begins at Moscow. Moscow established communism, then set out to extend itself throughout the world. It did not succeed. But in its attempt it caused Fascism to arise in Italy, Naziism in Germany.

Russian communism has all the repugnant features of Nazi-Fascism and some besides. Every form of persecution and oppression practiced by Nazi-Fascism was practiced first by communism. What Naziism is doing to the Jews, communism did to the kulak farmers. The religious persecution practiced by Naziism was practiced first by communism. It was communism that invented and introduced into the world the pattern of collectivist society and authoritarian government which Nazi-Fascism imitated, with some changes. It was the early Communist leaders, Lenin and Trotsky, who began the commotion which, taking different forms in different countries, has tortured the world for a generation.

That the Roosevelt Administration should be acutely indignant at Naziism is natural and justified. Nazi-Fascism is just now the more active menace in Latin America, of which we take account as a menace to the American continent. But the Administration owes it to itself and to America to be equally vigilant in defending democracy against both menaces, Nazi-Fascism and communism.

The Dies Committee

This obligation is the greater because the Dies Committee for investigating un-American activities has created the impression that the Administration is not sufficient alert to the danger of communism. The Dies Committee was organized to investigate un-American activities of both kinds, Communist and Nazi-Fascist. It did investigate both kinds. But its major emphasis was on communism.

After the Dies Committee became pictured as mainly engaged in investigating communism, the committee encountered what it regarded as lack of sympathetic support from the Administration. The Dies Committee feels that officials of the Administration—I quote the Dies Committee's report—"sought to discredit the investigation by ridicule and misrepresentation." To support this charge, the Dies Committee produces evidence. A witness before the Dies Committee mentioned, in a quite innocuous way, the name of Shirley Temple. This mention was used as the basis of jibes against the Dies Committee by Secretary Ickes of the Interior Department and Secretary Perkins of the Labor Department.

The Dies Committee gives frank expression to a suspicion that there are communistic activities in some departments of the Government. The Dies report says, "The committee did not have the time nor money to investigate fully Communist activities in the National Labor Relations Board." And in its summary of findings the Dies Committee says: "It [communism] has penetrated the Government itself, with the result that some Communists hold key positions in Federal agencies and projects."

Charges Communism in WPA

Specifically, the Dies Committee's reports says there is communism in WPA: "We are convinced that a rather large number of the employes of Federal Theater Project are either members of the Communist Party or are sympathetic with the Communist Party . . . The evidence is very clear that certain employes carried on Communistic activities openly in the Federal Writers Project."

These are charges of the gravest kind. If the charges are well based, the existence of our form of government is threatened. It is imperative that Congress should renew the life of the Dies Committee, give it ample funds for the employment of investigators and direct it to pursue its investigations wherever the evidence may lead. And it is imperative that the Administration should give all possible support to the investigation.

A New Diplomat

By Gerald G. Gross.

AYE, THE NEW MINISTER from the Netherlands is a thrifty and a canny mon, for his great-grandfather was a Scotsman.

Dr. Alexander Loudon, who disembarked in New York just one month ago today, is the first envoy of Scottish descent to head the Washington mission of a non-British government since the time of Dr. Guillermo Patterson, the late beloved Cuban.

"But I am mostly American," his excellency says with a laugh, "since my wife is American born and our baby daughter, therefore, is half American."

The Minister wonders whether one of his Scottish antecedents wasn't responsible for the naming of Loudoun County, Va. He suspects also that there may be a bond of relationship with former Gov. George O. Lowden of Illinois. Loudon, Loudoun and Lowden are all pronounced with a wide-mouthed "ow" in the first syllable, though the Minister wouldn't be surprised if they all sprang from a common Scottish ancestor which was voiced "Looden."

LIKE HIS PREDECESSOR, the popular Jonkheer van Haersma de With, Dr. Loudon is a career diplomat. During the last 22 years he has served in Bulgaria, Turkey, Greece, England, Argentina, Uruguay, Mexico, Spain, Portugal and Switzerland. Before coming to Washington he was on duty in Berne, though some of the society writers said it was Berlin, obviously an error due to transmission by telephone.

He will be 47 in June, but he looks younger. His motto, "Healthful diet means a healthy mind," may be a clew to his buoyancy. The Minister is of medium height, eyes are blue-gray green, hair is thin. He speaks Spanish, Portuguese, French, German, English and, of course, Dutch. During his Sofia days he handled Bulgarian pretty well but, lacking conversational opportunities since then, all that remains is a 30 or 40-word vocabulary.

But that word "Dutch:" The Minister hopes to witness a decline in its use by Americans because of their inclination to confuse it with "Deutsch." In England, he says, the distinction is clear, but on these shores a "Dutchman" is invariably a German. Nor will "Hollander" be satisfactory in every instance, since North and South Holland are not all of the kingdom. It appears we shall have to call them Netherlanders.

The country itself is better known as Holland than as the Netherlands because, as the Minister explains, in the Napoleonic era Holland was the strongest and most influential of seven provinces banded loosely together in a confederation. As Holland went, so went the alliance, since the former had a voting majority. When the provinces became united as a single sovereign state early in the nineteenth century, the name Holland persisted, as it does down to the present day.

BORN IN THE HAGUE (whose name he does not claim to be of Scottish derivation and originally spelled H-a-i-g), Dr. Loudon was graduated in law from the University of Leyden, which gave him his doctor's degree. A cousin, Jonkheer John Loudon, was Minister to the United States from the Netherlands 30 years ago. Another cousin, Jonkheer A. C. D. deGraeff, held the same post when Dr. Loudon came to Washington for the first time, in 1924, as Second Secretary of the legation. Former Minister deGraeff is now in charge of arrangements for the Netherlands' exhibition at the New York World's Fair this year.

The Loudons are still living at the Shoreham Hotel, pending arrival of their furniture and household accessories, when they will move into the legation on Meridian Hill. The shipment will include the Minister's collection of Dutch prints, of which he is very fond.

He reads a good deal, especially the newspapers, and plans to take up golf again, after a long layoff, but there are grounds for strong suspicion that his favorite pastime is Henriette, now 6 months old.

Mme. Loudon was formerly Beatrice Candler Cobb, of New York. She and her husband are two very busy people at the present time, what with all the social obligations incumbent upon a newly arrived diplomatic couple. Visiting all of the other embassies and legations, then staying at home while they come to see you is a pretty formidable routine.

Dr. Alexander Loudon of the Netherlands.

Congress Must Now Give Answer to Nation's Call for More Defenses

World War Difficulties Recalled

Congressmen Show Desire to Investigate Thoroughly Before Voting on Arms

By William V. Nessly.

Congress, fresh from the polling places of the Nation, this week takes over, in effect, control of the country's foreign affairs.

Elected by a populace greatly disturbed over warlike trends in other lands, a populace world-minded as seldom before, the new Senators and Representatives are looked to for reflections in Washington of the views, the fears or the confident peace hopes of those who sent them here.

And the people at home, if one is to place credence in polls and other samplings of opinion that heretofore have proved reliable, want adequate defensive armament.

Gone entirely, apparently, is that pacific optimism that led William Jennings Bryan, resisting the preparedness drive of pre-World War days, to cry out:

"If the United States should ever be forced into war a million men would spring to arms overnight."

Bryan lived to see the country forced into war. He saw no million men spring to arms overnight. He saw President Wilson issue no fewer than three calls for volunteers even to fill the tiny Regular Army, tiny in comparison with the hosts battling across Europe. And he saw the Nation struggle a full year with mobilization and training problems before it was able to put a soldier in the battle lines.

Public Supports Defense Program

Recalling, perhaps, America's difficulties in those days of wondering whether the Allies could hold out long enough for this country's might to be made effective, the American public seems prepared to support steadfastly President Roosevelt's national defense program, prepared even to support it before they knew the details to be recommended to Congress.

Dr. George Gallup, director of the American Institute of Public Opinion whose polls have attained a reputation for almost startling accuracy, wrote in the past week that "the most recent studies show that more than eight in every ten voters want to see the Army and Navy increased, and an even larger proportion—nine in every ten—favor a larger airforce. The surveys also show that a majority are even willing to pay higher taxes to support an enlarged defense program.

"While Administration forces may experience some difficulty in selling the whole arms program to Congress," he concludes, "there will probably be little difficulty in selling it to the public."

Indications that the public recently was willing to go even further in the matter of preparedness came from the poll by Fortune magazine, which showed, its publishers reported, that Americans even favored joining with other democracies against further expansion by the dictator lands.

Armed defense of North America and the Philippines, but not South America also was called for by the survey's results, the Munich peace was termed "too bad" but the only way peace could be preserved at that time, and belief was expressed that there will be a European war within the next few years, and the United States will be drawn into it.

Even allowing for the possibility that the shock of the Munich settlement was so recent as to stun temporarily the traditional isolationist viewpoint of most of the country, the results of the poll are in line with others that have been taken in various ways and in widely separated sections.

More Drastic Program Was Expected

Thus, even a much more elaborate armament program than the President suggested to Congress last Thursday might have been expected to receive popular support.

The mildness of Mr. Roosevelt's proposals, amid expectations in some quarters of a vast program that would "darken the skies" with fighting planes, was the surprise of the week's developments in defense matters.

A call for $552,000,000 in authorizations for additional land, sea and air safeguards, of which only $210,000,000 would have to be spent in the next 17 months was well below what had been anticipated in view of the President's sobering picture of international affairs in his previous message on the state of the union.

The restraint displayed in the defense message itself might have been expected to remove much of the apprehension voiced by some members of the new Congress in advance of its delivery, apprehension that brought warnings against building a huge war machine that might increase the danger of involving the Nation in conflict.

Yet Congressional reaction to the program has not been confined to wholehearted acceptance.

Back of some of the cautious protestations against the proposed expenditures may be seen long-existent reluctance toward any active American participation in world politics. Party lines are cut across by this sentiment, but the active and energetic espousal of preparations that can serve as a warning to powers who plan their expansion without consideration of the United States as a factor in world politics likewise knows no party bounds.

While Senator Vandenberg, Michigan Republican, says he is unable "to concede the imminence of danger" reflected in the President's message; Senator Barbour, of New Jersey, another Republican, sees "no reason why I cannot support them [the recommendations]."

And while Democratic Chairman Vinson, of the House Naval Affairs committee, considered it "a very moderate, well-rounded defense message," Chairman Walsh, of the Senate Committe, a Massachusetts Democrat, termed the suggested air force expansion "something that will require thorough examination and sober consideration."

Opponents Surprised By Mild Request

Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, emphasized the mildness of the President's requests in expressing the view that "some senators who had been getting their feet set in the sand to resist a large appropriation had the sand cut out from under them by the modesty of the program."

Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, leader of the neutrality bloc, however, held that the unexpected smallness of the fund requested "would rather indicate that the President has been sensing the public pulse."

Through the floor struggle over the program, too, there will be injected often and forcefully, the tangled question of revising the neutrality law designed to prevent this country's entrapment in any future war as it was entrapped in 1917.

Greater discretion for the President in applying arms embargoes will be energetically sought, and just as stoutly resisted.

Tightening of the law, on the other hand, as a further effort toward noninvolvement in foreign wars, will be the goal of Senators Nye, Bone and others.

Contrasting with their view is the stand of the committee for concerted peace, composed of representatives of 15 national peace organizations, which only yesterday proposed that the neutrality law be altered to provide that "when the President shall find that a nation is at war in violation of a treaty with the United States, he shall inform Congress and, with its consent, shall apply his embargo (on munitions) to the treaty-breaker only and not against the victim."

Such a clause would, it is contended, meet such puzzling situations as the present Japanese invasion of China, in which application of an arms embargo would do greater damage to the cause of the aggrieved nation, China, than to that of the aggressor, Japan, since China must import all of the munitions needed to resist the invasion.

Nye advances these points to keep America at peace:

Avoidance of being stamped into "a wild spending in the name of defense," maintenance of the neutrality law "which is the lone evidence today that America learned anything as a result of the last war;" prevention of war profits to any citizen; an embargo on munitions in peacetime and wartime alike, and a referendum on any participation in a foreign war.

The drive for lifting the embargo on arms to Spain, admittedly sought in the interest of the Loyalist side in that country's civil war, already is under way on Capitol Hill as well as the State Department.

All the pressure for alterations in the Nation's foreign policies has caused Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, to write:

"A more subtle and a more persistent campaign to involve us in European controversies is going on than at any time since I have been in public office."

Another conflict and a heated one is most likely over the recommendation of the special Navy board headed by Admiral Arthur J. Hepburn calling for immediate creation of a score of new naval and air bases as part of the defense program. The President has indorsed the report.

Chief controversial items in the report are proposals for an impregnable advanced fleet base on Guam Island, only 1,500 miles from Tokyo, and a secondary air base on Wake Island.

Adoption of the proposals would carry vastly farther out into the Pacific the outposts of the American defense line, heretofore considered to extend from the Hawaiian Islands to Alaska. Such bases as it proposed, the Hepburn board held, would greatly simplify the defense of Hawaii and the United States coast, and at the same time, provide practical protection to the Philippines.

Irritation Might Lead to War

While Tokyo voices her resentment of the suggestion, there is developing hostility in Congress on the grounds that the advanced bases would be difficult to maintain and would provide a cause for irritation that might ultimately lead to war.

But whatever may be the decisions in all the problems tangled up in foreign affairs, the decisions themselves now must come from Congress.

The President and his State Department advisers, his ambassadors and ministers, through the long months of crises abroad while there was no Senate and House in session, have carried on the Nation's relations with the rest of the world.

Now the President has reported to the newly-elected legislators on their observations. Ambassadors Kennedy and Bullitt have delivered in secret their views on whether war is waiting on the springtime, Mr. Roosevelt has given his estimate of the country's defense needs.

It's up to Congress now.

To arm, or not to arm. That is the question about which talk in the Congressional halls of the Capitol is centered. The President has made proposals for armaments—not only to defend the United States, but also to protect the whole Western Hemisphere from aggression. Will America's vast arms building plants, actual and potential, be set in operation for the purpose? Congress, which is now investigating, will soon decide.

Teaching Men To Think Is St. John's Aim

the basis of a four-year college course.

Besides teaching duties and the effort to assure themselves of their own liberal education, St. John's instructors have given serious attention to improved translations of various works on the book list. The college already has published its own editions of 15 of the classics. Six of these are new translations, while the others are reprints of books no longer available.

"There is abundant opportunity for faculty research here," Dr. Barr believes, "but it doesn't mean just publishing monographs for the admiration of other scholars." Research at St. John's must always be subordinate to the task of teaching young men to think, in the sense that it "opens up the material" students work with and enables the teacher to pass on a fresher and fuller understanding of the subject.

Another enterprise of the St. John's faculty is adult education. More than 70 Annapolis citizens have paid $7.50 for 12-week courses in a variety of subjects of their own suggestion. Classes began the first week of January with instruction furnished by teachers from St. John's and the Naval Academy.

College Conducts Seminar for Adults

The adult seminar St. John's conducts in Baltimore, unlike the Annapolis program, is directly adapted from the list of classics. Fifteen men and women, including an attorney, psychiatrist and aeronautical engineer, have signed up for the series of 12 seminars on the Greek dramatists, historians and philosophers. Washington will be admitted to the vision of a free mind February 7 when an adult seminar on the Baltimore model opens at the Central Library.

Meanwhile the 60 young men whose enrollment at St. John's may some day be marked as a milestone of American history continue their search for a liberal education. The true test of success for the St. John's program, its leaders know, will not come until new plan graduates have taken up their places in community life and demonstrated the quality of their training.

But all the evidence so far accumulated encourages Dr. Barr and his backers. The plan, in operation today, looks much the same as it did on paper in the summer of 1937, he reports, except that "the student pick-up is quicker than we expected and the interest keener. It is a subtle task to build learning morale, without resorting to military discipline, but it's being accomplished here."

Students say they study an average of 50 hours a week. "There's some groaning," according to Dr. Barr, "but plenty of steam in the boiler."

National Affairs

Congressmen Talk Too Much

To some members of Congress it seems that too much time is wasted in oratory. Shortly after the session opened the so-called "Atherton Resolutions" on State's rights were introduced. It was hoped by their author, Mr. Atherton, of New Hampshire, that their adoption would stop all efforts of the Abolitionists in the matter of forcing Congress to abolish slavery in the territories and to prevent the extension of slavery wherever it had the constitutional power, a topic which had caused much argument and strife at the last session. These resolutions would forbid the introduction of any petition bearing on this subject.

The fact that they were presented by a New Englander, thereby depriving the Southern members of their cherished thunder, provoked further argument by both Northern and Southern members. Where would it all end? Mr. Williams, of Kentucky, had an idea. His resolution read like this: "Resolved, That it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution, and the expectation of the people that Congress should make and exact laws for the general good and welfare of the Nation, and to promote the prosperity and happiness of the people . . . whereas, instead Congress of the United States seems to be assembled for the purpose of obtaining power for those who are out, and of retaining it for those who are in office, thereby contravening the great object and intention of the framers of the Constitution:

"Therefore, be it resolved, if it is intended not to act upon public and private business for which we were assembled, but only to remain here for the purpose of making speeches, that Congress ought to be forthwith adjourned, and that the people should hereafter elect members to Congress who will work more and talk less."

A Voice From "The Hermitage"

In spite of his advancing years "Ole Hickory" still takes a keen interest in national affairs, particularly in matters which concern the status of his protege, President Van Buren. In a recent letter to the President, Gen. Jackson congratulates the Democrats in the House on their ability to elect their candidate, Mr. Garland, for the Clerkship of the House when it appeared almost certain that by a combination of Whigs and Conservatives he would be defeated.

To the General it indicated a determination to erect a solid front against onslaughts of the opposition, and "a means of putting down the Conservatives." No one can appreciate the value of party solidarity better than former President Jackson.

Domestic Affairs

Pirates Get $26,000

Salem, Mass.—The officers and crew of the sailing ship Eclipse, just in port from Sumatra, tell of a harrowing experience with pirates while loading a cargo of pepper in a harbor of that island. It seems that in the midst of weighing the cargo one of the natives struck the captain over the head with a marlin spike, causing instant death; another native knocked out the mate. With this signal the native stevedores started a free-for-all fight.

Most of the crew jumped overboard; those remaining were thrown down the hatches. The pirates plundered the ship, taking $26,000 in specie, arms, ammunition, spy glasses, and everything else of any value. In the meanwhile, one member of the crew had been able to gain the side of a French sloop of war in the harbor and secure aid from its commander; another had reached shore after swimming 2 miles through the surf and notified the rajah, who likewise promised aid. But when the aid came the pirates had fled to the interior of the island with the loot.

Noted Rogue Escapes From Sing Sing

OSSINING, N. Y.—A convict of this prison, who had yet many years to serve, escaped this week by a clever ruse. "He was engaged in painting and had in the room where he worked a small model of a newly invented machine for the purpose of painting it. Placing this model under his arm and throwing on an old cloak, he walked deliberately out of the prison." The guards thought he was "an agent or contractor." After reaching the hollow below the prison, he threw down the model and made his escape.

Foreign Affairs

Iron Vessels Becoming More Popular

London, Eng.—Convinced that iron is the best material out of which to build steam vessels, John Laird, builder of the famous iron steamboat, the Rainbow, which makes "the most rapid passage of any other vessel between London and Antwerp," has now laid down at his yard at North Birkenhead the keels of six new vessels to be constructed wholly of iron.

The President, sister-ship of the British Queen, which Mr. Laird is now building for the transatlantic trade, will be likewise constructed of iron. The new vessel will be 2,500 tons and have a freight capacity of 1,500 tons.

Peru-Bolivian Confederation Threatened

Lima, Peru.—The long dress of Gen. Andres Santa Cruz, President of Peru, with respect to the maintenance of the Peru-Bolivian Confederation which became true in '36 when the Confederation was founded, seems to be now threatened Chile. Under the pretense of putting down a rebellion on the border, but in reality jealous of the success of the Confederation, Chile has sent an army to Callao, the port of Lima. Gen. Santa Cruz has assembled an army of 9,000 men to defend his capital.

She painfully typed out her diary on the porch of a friend's summer cottage while Malvina C. "Tommy" Thompson, her secretary and friend, was still recuperating from an appendicitis operation. And nothing in her whole year's program caused more front page commotion than the news that she had bobbed her hair and taken to lipstick.

"I'm so tired of my hair and my lips I could die," she wailed after a week of explanation.

Nothing in her plans for the coming year indicates any essential change in her habits or activities, but it promises to be a year packed with events. The climax will come in May when the gracious but unconventional Mrs. Roosevelt will have the King and Queen of England as guests.

A Vote Against Waste

For the first time the Administration has met with a rebuff in attempting to force its relief program through Congress.

In voting to reduce the amount of the WPA deficiency appropriation from the $875,000,000 requested by the President to $725,000,000, the House has in effect issued a declaration of independence from executive dictation. That is the most significant aspect of the revolt which overwhelmed supporters of the Administration last week. The House action indicates a loss of faith in the efficiency of present relief policies, whether as an aid to the needy or as an asset for Administration supporters. It also testifies to the growing conviction that a vote against spending is good politics.

The fact that business activity has been rising steadily in recent months without a corresponding reduction in relief outlays provides a strong argument in favor of retrenchment at this time. Even with relief appropriations cut to $725,000,000, tionstotal expenditures for the last five months of the current fiscal year would be almost as large as those for the same period a year ago. However, despite the propitious conditions now prevailing, a Congressman needs fortitude to vote for a reduction in WPA rolls, while turning a deaf ear to dire prophecies of suffering and distress to follow.

One of the most perturbing consequences of the Administration's relief spending program is that it expands so easily and contracts with such painful reluctance. Since the WPA at the peak of its operations provided work for only a part of the eligible unemployed, it follows that the pressure to fill the relief rolls does not relax as labor is reabsorbed by private industry. The result is an erratic up and down movement of WPA employment, reflecting changed attitudes toward spending rather than changes in the volume of unemployment or the intensity of need.

Congress may have to inflict some incidental suffering upon the victims of our inadequate, ill-planned relief system for the sake of securing the benefits that will ultimately flow from a return to sound fiscal policies and balanced budgets. Of course the initial step in that direction just taken by the House does not deal finally or effectively with the problem of relief. There is, indeed, some basis for Representative Cannon's charge that the reduction voted is "arbitrary" and due to a "preconceived notion to cut whatever figure was recommended in the budget."

In defense of the House, however, it must be said that given present chaotic conditions, any attempt to check a spending habit that can only lead to disaster is praiseworthy. But if the good effect is to last, Congress must find some rational method of reducing relief costs through reformation of the relief system.

Until such major reforms are instituted, it would be most unwise to give civil service status to administrative employes of the WPA, even though failure to do so has in the past exposed them to political pressure. The WPA was set up as an emergency organization and its employes have been regarded as holders of temporary positions. If the House had removed the ban imposed upon payment of WPA funds to anyone having a civil service job, it would have created expectations of permanency of tenure.

After the future of the WPA has been settled, the status of Federal employes of relief agencies may properly be considered. Meantime, nothing should be done to increase the pressure upon Congress to prolong the existence of a discredited relief system.

Stamp Of Approval

Card players are not ordinarily tongue-tied, and that there has been no recent outburst against the iniquities of the stamp tax on playing cards may be due to the fact that it is not iniquitous.

Even though the whole duty of the statesman is not to soak the rich and idle there would still be nothing wrong with the law that taxes playing cards; for cards have ever been representative of wealth and leisure.

They still are; though the wealth may be represented by a relief check, and the leisure enforced by the lack of a job. In most cases, however, it is a wealth more tangible and a leisure more pleasurable, and any increase in card playing cannot fairly be considered a national ill. People might easily be worse employed; playing a saxophone, for instance.

It is with cheerfulness, therefore, that we note the report of the Bureau of Internal Revenue that during the fiscal year 1937-38 the tax was paid on nearly 2,000,000 more packs of cards than during the previous year. That means, very roughly speaking, that nearly 2,000,000 people refused to face a new deal without a new deck.

In both cases, of course, there is always hope for a grand slam.

If Franco Wins

If the foreign policy of the United States were really actuated by long-range considerations, there can be little doubt that the Administration, even at this late date, would be taking steps to lift the embargo on the shipment of munitions to republican Spain. And that conclusion does not depend on the secondary arguments frequently cited against the embargo.

Certainly it is of very dubious propriety, under international law, for this country to apply an arms embargo impartially against a friendly government and against those who seek to overthrow it by rebellion. The precedent is one which tends to encourage revolt against duly constituted authority and may rise to plague us in future. For our present Spanish policy is a direct intimation that if a fascist movement should try to overthrow a neighboring Latin-American government we would deny responsible authority there its clear-cut right to buy munitions here to put the rebellion down.

There is, further, the obvious inconsistency between the application of our neutrality policy in Spain and in the Sino-Japanese war. In the latter case American munitions are allowed to go freely to both sides, even though the Department of State points out that by application of moral pressure it has greatly curtailed shipments of aeronautical equipment to Japan. In this case there is no embargo, but policy operates to discourage American aid to the aggressor. In the Spanish case there is an embargo, and policy operates to the disadvantage of the government against which aggression is directed.

This tacit favoritism to Franco would be justified if the Administration were willing to recognize his regime as the legitimate government of Spain, or at least as a rebellious movement entitled by its success to a grant of belligerent rights. But as matters stand the only Spanish government accorded recognition by the United States is the one against which the rebellion is directed. And while we accord this government the right to speak for all of Spain we deny it the privileges which are properly in disseverable from diplomatic recognition.

The reasons for this attempt to carry water on both shoulders are obvious Feeling in this country with respect to the Spanish civil war runs very high. There are well-organized and powerful groups of American citizens supporting both sides. One faction regards Franco's rebellion as an esentially fascist movement, designed to destroy the democratic forces in Spain and to pave the way for the triumph of totalitarian doctrine in western Europe. The other faction regards Franco's rebellion as a holy war against the powers of darkness, with which the Spanish government recognized by the United States is identified because of real or alleged communist affiliations or sympathies.

Fearful of alienating either group of domestic partisans the Administration seeks to close its eyes to the tremendous implications of the Spanish struggle. Throughout the evolving crisis our official attitude has been consistently negative. We refuse to admit that Franco has any standing. And simultaneously we refuse to admit that the Spanish government has any rights.

As long as stalemate characterized the Spanish civil war this wholly negative policy could be continued. And as long as there were prospects of the rebellion being crushed our Spanish policy, while few would call it admirable, could at least be said to work. Since recognition has never been withdrawn from the republicans, victory by the republicans would cause no future difficulties.

Now, however, it begins to appear that the government will be defeated. And for that eventuality our diplomacy is wholly unprepared. Whether the ultimate triumph of Franco, which becomes steadily more probable, is morally desirable or undesirable as far as Spain is concerned is not the subject of present consideration. What should be examined, on a purely intellectual basis, is the effect of such a victory on vital American interests.

Whatever the nobility of the aspirations behind Franco's rebellion, and whatever the outrages and excesses to be attributed to the republicans, one fact is abundantly clear. Franco is deeply in debt to Mussolini and to Hitler. It would be childish to assume that those who have paid the piper are going to refrain from calling the tune. And one place where the pay-off must be anticipated is in Latin America.

The protracted civil war in Spain may have weakened, but certainly has not destroyed, the great influence of that country in the American republics which were once its colonies. The triumph of a strongly nationalistic, racially conscious revolutionary movement in Spain is bound to be followed by an assertive pan-Hispanic movement. When such a movement has been made possible only by Italian and German assistance it is idle to suppose that it will not be directed in the Italian and German interest, both in the sphere of trade and that of political propaganda.

A victory for the Spanish republicans would undoubtedly create problems, but that eventuality now seems academic. A victory for Franco, on the other hand, has become probable, if not imminent. However admirable he may be as an individual, Gen. Franco is politically a fascist. Not once but many times he has publicly expressed his faith in the totalitarian ideology. The aid accorded him by Mussolini and Hitler is thoroughly logical. And a Franco victory would make a fascist springboard of the Iberian Peninsula, including Portugal as well as Spain, extending to the Azores, the Canary Islands and other potential air and submarine bases pointing toward South America.

The enormous importance attached by the Administration to the recent Lima Conference shows the keen awareness of the Department of State to the importance of Latin America in our foreign policy. The anxiety of most Americans to prevent a spread of totalitarian doctrine in the New World is unmistakable. What has not yet dawned on the general public is the enormous impetus to such indoctrination which will be given if Gen. Franco captures Barcelona and thereby sets the seal of doom upon the present Spanish republic.

This is not the problem of Great Britain and France. A westward fascist push operating from a Spain in fee to Rome and Berlin would worry these nations very little. There is no reason why Chamberlain and Daladier should fight this battle for us. It is a problem for the United States alone. It is a problem in which American policy must be decided in Washington, without reference to London and Paris.

That it is a problem of the first magnitude is recognized in all authoritative circles. One military expert, Maj. George Fielding Eliot, has gone so far as to assert that for the Azores to pass under Nazi or Fascist influence "would be a matter of such grave concern to this country that it is a question whether we ought not to resist it by force, should it appear imminent."

With a final victory by Franco this and other far-reaching developments affecting the New World would definitely appear imminent. Such a triumph on the part of the Berlin-Rome axis would, so far as this country is concerned, make the dismemberment of Czecho-Slovakia seem an affair of purely secondary importance.

There is undoubtedly cause for concern in the inability of many Americans to see that every mile which Franco gains in Catalonia brings fascism nearer to the New World, makes its immunity from totalitarian doctrines less secure.

Law Must Be Supreme

Former Gov. Murphy's explanation of his handling of the Michigan sit-down strikes in 1937 will not satisfy all of his critics. But it will give the Senate a much clearer view of his qualifications to serve as Attorney General.

As Governor of Michigan, Mr. Murphy delayed enforcement of a court order for the ejection of sit-down strikers from automobile plants in Flint until an agreement had been reached. He insists that he did not ignore the writ; that, on the contrary, he warned the union representatives it would be enforced. The Governor justifies his action by saying that immediate enforcement of the court order would have involved the "gravest risk of property damage, riot and even bloodshed."

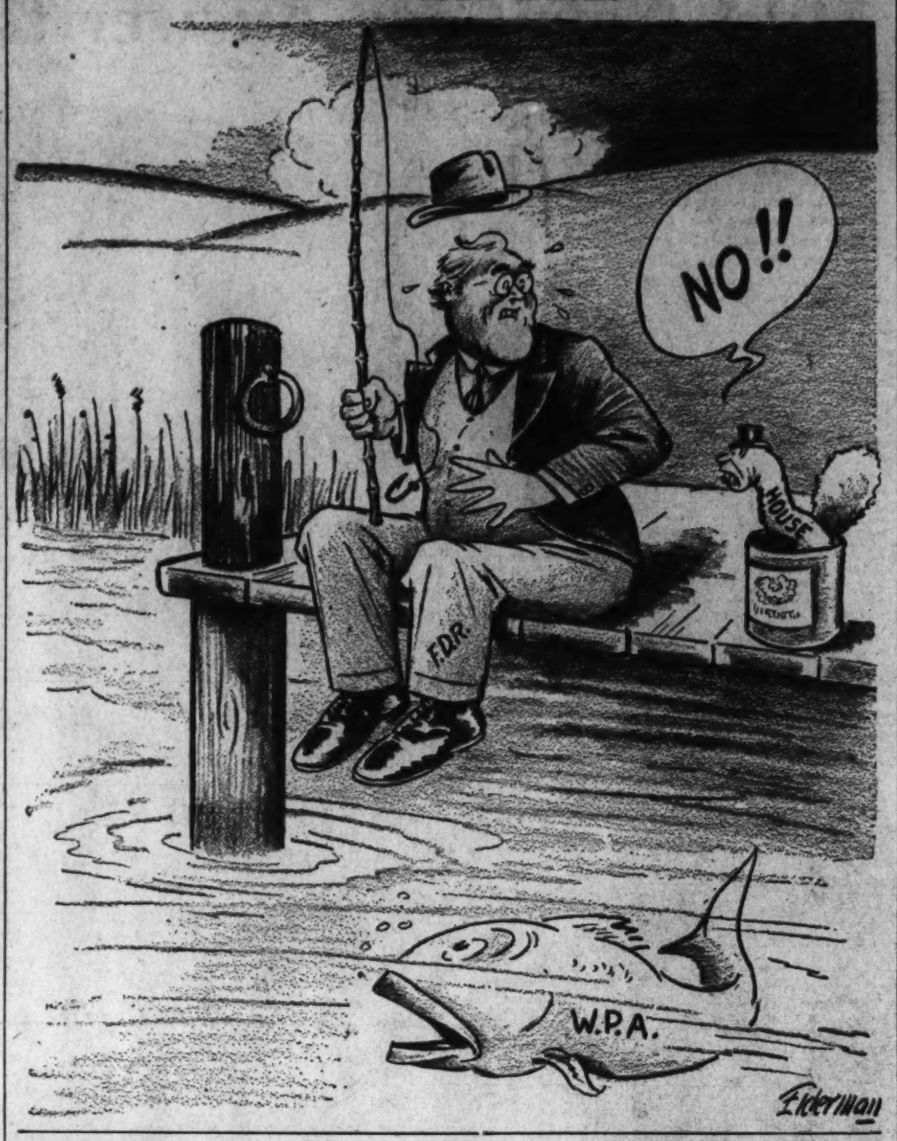
Much can be said in favor of Mr. Murphy's contention that "faithful execution" of a Governor's duties "includes wise administration of the law and not merely its literal instantaneous application at any cost." His desire to avoid bloodshed and to see reason prevail was almost universally shared. The chief question, so far as his capacity as an executive is concerned, is whether his willingness to temporize and the mild nature of his "ultimatum" to the sit-down strikers encouraged further resort to illegal practices, with consequent riots and bloodshed.

But the Senate is not attempting to pass judgment upon Mr. Murphy's actions as Governor of Michigan. It is concerned with his fitness to be chief legal adviser to the President and head of the Federal Government's law-enforcement agency. In this connection it is Mr. Murphy's voluntary and emphatic denunciation of the sit-down strike as an illegal practice that is significant.

Apparently there never was any question in his mind as to the illegality of the sit-down strike. He recognized at once that workers who seized factories by force and prevented their operation were "guilty of violating the law." In his statement to the Senate sub-committee considering his nomination Mr. Murphy said: "From the very beginning of the labor trouble in Michigan I warned the union representatives that the sit-down strike was illegal and, further, that its use would alienate public opinion."

Regardless of criticisms of Gov. Murphy's conduct as an executive, it is reassuring to know that he fully recognized the supremacy of law, even when convenience suggested that it be temporarily ignored. Any other attitude on the part of an Attorney General would be a contradiction in terms.

The Worm Turns



Enchantment

FOUR OF THEM had gone to one of the Abbey Theater plays and afterwards, while they had a beer, the talk turned to Ireland and its mists and legends. "It's easy enough," said one, "to be skeptical about banshees and mystery here; but after you've been in Ireland ten days, you believe in them. If not in a real woman combing her hair and moaning along one of those valleys—though you come to that, too—at least you believe in something; something extra, as it were; something that may not exist in our terms, but that has power."

The youngest of the group, who had hardly spoken, roused himself. "Yes," he said. "It's that something extra. I felt it once in this country a year or so ago. A party of us had gone for a weekend to a house in New Hampshire—the girl whose family owned the house, her fiance, myself and two or three others.

"We were just a jolly banal crowd of young people having a good time. Dick and Molly were a pair of sweethearts like any other. Everything was quite ordinary and pleasant until Sunday afternoon when the others left. Molly and Dick and I stayed on to shut up the house and then we were to drive down to Milford.

"The others went off about 5 o'clock, shouting and laughing. And we shouted and laughed after them. But when the car had disappeared down the hill, the place seemed very silent, deserted.

"'Listen,' said Molly. 'I bought a little hawthorn tree the other day. I wonder if we could plant it before we go. If you two would dig a hole —here.' She pointed beside the well.

"'It's midsummer eve,' said Dick, laughing, 'Do you think it's quite safe to have anything to do with hawthorns?'

"She took him seriously. In that high and lovely and suddenly silent place, midsummer eve seemed important. 'I thought the fairies would like it—planting one of their trees. It's not as if we were cutting it down.'

"We dug a good deep hole while Molly put the house in order. Then we poured in a bucket of water, unwrapped the burlap from the tree's roots and tramped the earth down hard around it. We did a first class job—more water, of course, at the end. It was a lovely little tree, about 6 feet, slender and green. We had taken our time about it and it was late when we finished. Molly suggested that we eat supper on the terrace and watch the moon rise and drive down afterwards.

"She and Dick pulled their chairs close together and I sat down in front of them on the warm stones. The moon was nearly full and it rose magnificently over the low hills—little mounds of hills, they have there, that bubble away to the horizon. It was hot and a warm wind was blowing. The moon rose clear, but in a few seconds black bits of cloud began to chase across it. They never covered it—but they didn't leave it alone to be bright and clear, either.

"'It's funny, suddenly—isn't it?' Molly said.

"We nodded. We were a little afraid to speak of it. But we all felt an exhilaration, an excitement and a little fear. We looked at each other lovingly. It was as if we had all become very remarkable, full of unknown powers—but open to unknown dangers, too. The wind whistled and was very warm. Dick nodded and we packed up the rest of the food and put our suit cases in the car. As we got in, it seemed as though we were going on a tremendous adventure—an expedition that might be dangerous and would certainly be very wonderful.

"Molly went to the hawthorn and felt to see that it was solid. Then she got in the car between us and we started down the hill.

"I don't know if you've ever driven east by south out of New Hampshire into Massachusetts. It seems down hill all the way. You have the sensation that you could turn off the motor and roll to the coast. And that night it was as if we had no mechanical help at all. We simply sat and sped down the hills. And all the time that moon was above us, with its teasing black clouds, inky black, not lit up at all. Sometimes we were in darkness, under tunnels of trees, then out again into the moonlight and the queer shadows.

"We were excited still and curiously happy. Molly and Dick were no longer just an engaged couple. I felt their separate loves spread out like ripples, touch my love that suddenly spread, too. We were separate, though Molly was leaning on me a little and had her hand on Dick's knee. We were separate and whole. The night was very strange and like all strangeness it had a different meaning for each of us and only the outside ripples of our understanding touched and merged.

"When we left the black road, Dick switched off the lights and we went silently and darkly, like an animal who knew its moon-swept tracks. It was very hot. Our hearts were beating heavily as we neared the end of our journey, as if we knew that the moment of trial was near. Molly laughed a little, and Dick laughed, too, for no reason at all. Finally we swerved into the drive and came to a halt. The long descent was over. As we got out of the car, the moon was bright and clear of clouds. It threw the sharp shadow of the house over us. Blacker than anything we had seen that night, with menacing angles, the shadow engulfed us. I stepped aside into the moonlight and the ambiguous shadows of trees and shrubs; but Molly and Dick stayed in the house shadow.

"A low light was burning in the window. It seemed to flicker like a will o' the wisp. 'This is the danger,' I wanted to say to them. 'This is what the barman wanted to warn you of. This house, this horror of angles, this blackness is the terrible thing you have been racing to find and feared to find. Now is your last chance to escape it.' Out loud I said, 'Let's stay out all night, wouldn't it be better?'

"Dick grunted. But Molly had a glimmering of what I intended. She kissed me gravely, leaning out of the house shadow to where I stood in the moonlight. Then she kissed Dick, too, as though it were not certain that she would ever see him again. She hesitated a moment as if she felt she ought to do something else, then went into the house and Dick picked up the bags and followed her.

"I stayed out until the sun rose. I knew enough to save myself, even if I had lost them.

"They are married now and live in that house. I suppose they are happy. I hope they are because they will never get out again. They are a couple such as you meet anywhere, charming, handsome. But I never feel the waters of their mystery ripple out to touch mine, never feel the exaltation, the excitement, the separate love that bound the three of us that night.

Last Stand Of The Muse

The art of poetry is in danger of extinction. It can only be saved in one way, namely by use of the radio.

The art itself is healthy enough. I believe that there are more good poets alive today than at any time since the seventeenth century. The poets are alive, but their public is dead. To be more exact, the public is being deprived of its poetic sustenance, and has now accustomed itself to various substitutes. Poetry, in short, is the victim of an economic process which has much wider aspects, but none of such eventual importance. The trend toward standardization and mass production has finally invaded the province of the arts—of all the arts—and, in particular, the publishing of books has now become an affair of costing and accounting.

Even so poetry might still survive but for the operation of a law well known to any economist—I am referring to Gresham's Law. Bad money drives out good; the worst form of currency in circulation regulates the value of the whole currency. Perhaps it is dangerous to use such an analogy in talking of poetry; but it is a simple fact which anyone who is connected with publishing can vouch for that what we call popular literature is quickly driving out of circulation anything in the nature of poetry or belles lettres.

In a process of mass production, poetry cannot compete. Poetry is limited in quantity at any given time; it is a still small voice, which might be enlarged by the microphone, but by no means made into a chorus. You may fix your standard high and say there are ten good living poets; you may fix it relatively low and say there are a hundred; but even this larger body can only produce some 20 volumes of verse a year. How can these 20 compete with the hundreds and thousands of volumes of fiction, biography, travel and politics from which the publisher derives his main profits? How can they compete on the overcrowded book-stall or in the library? They are buried under this pulpy avalanche.

Poetry, at any rate under the present economic dispensation, is dead letters. Poetry is ceasing to be printed; poetry is no longer read. Nothing can bring it back into circulation. But poetry was not always dependent on the printing machine and the publisher. Poetry was originally, and still is organically, the spoken word. And what it has been it can be again. This is where the radio comes in. It is in the power of the radio to revive poetry as a spoken art. It will be a slow and difficult process, and I would venture to say that nothing that has hitherto been done by the British Broadcasting Corporation has even made a beginning. For we must begin with a process of disintoxication; we must get the ink out of the body poetic. We must forget that poetry was ever printed. Poets must return to the babbling stage, and from that stage slowly evoke a speaking technique. There must be many experiments, not only in the composition of poems, but also in the speaking of poems. The same poem must be spoken many times, by different voices and in different contexts. We must get rid of the idea that poetry can be read, or announced, or even recited.

Call it a bardic vision, call it what you will—I am convinced that this side of a complete social revolution it is the only possible chance of saving poetry. Perhaps I should say of saving the poets, because they have the alternative of continuing to write poetry for their intimate amusement. But this underground life which our poets live is not a healthy one; one by one they will fall silent and there will be only the monuments of a past age to show that shuch an art ever existed.

Happy Is The Medium

WILD BILL entered the Corner Store and, shooting from the hip, swiftly laid low the Old Timers, pop, pop, pop, one after the other; after which he urged his grandfather to buy him another box of caps for his pistol.

When the bandit had rejoined the other desperadoes on the store porch Casual Smith remarked, "What makes the world interesting is the fact that everything in the world is like everything else in the world."

"It isn't, and it doesn't make sense," complained Demosthenes McGinnis.

"What of it?" asked Casual Smith. "What you mean, of course, is that it doesn't seem to make sense. All life is more or less like that. My dear old grandmother used to tell me that we sometimes missed the pattern because we were looking on the wrong side of the quilt. But there was something simpler in my mind at the moment. I was thinking of the tragic crime of which we were a minute ago the innocent victims. I, too, was Wild Bill in my childhood."

"And you've ruined the boy with your stories," said Capt. Ebenezer Longbow. "He might have been a gangster if you had let him alone."

"He'll be a thousand different persons before he grows up, Eb. And all through his life he will be balancing himself between one type and another like a man on a tight-rope.

"Swaying between good and evil," suggested Parson Bob.

"Partly, domine. He'll find a path for himself, a right path or a wrong path between miserliness and extravagance, between caution and cowardice, egotism and excessive humility, bravery and foolhardiness, plodding and loafing, thinking and worrying, loyalty and fanaticism, patriotism and fetishism. And the striving for the right path, conscious or unconscious will extend through all the routine of his existence, the practices persisted in becoming habits. Habits are road-builders who make travel easy for the traveler willing to travel in a rut. One of the paradoxes of existence is that while we journey from the cradle to the grave we go over the same road day after day without once retracing our steps. The best of us move in a rut; and the man who steps out of it is invariably looked down upon by his followers. Once in a while he finds better paths. Sometimes he is merely mired."

"Knew you'd get tangled in your figures," jeered Capt. Longbow. "Now you've got keeping in the middle of the road identical with sticking in a rut."

Casual Smith laughed. "Guilty, m'lud," he said. "So I'll go back to my first proposition. Everything in the world is like everything else in the world and it is that that makes the world interesting. To which I add the further proposition that every living thing after rushing to extremes strives for a happy medium. This is probably as true of the individual cell as of any collection of cells that make a higher organism. The diatom which has designed more than ten thousand different types of houses is doubtless still striving for one which will contain the best features of each. But the cell which is part of an organism, little or big, is necessarily a slave of that organism, a slave of habit.

"This is as true of the little pump in the tiny root tendril of a turnip or a cedar as of the somewhat larger pump which keeps your blood in circulation. All three alike are regimented and any departure from the normal, any stepping out of the rut will spell disaster."

"Careful!" warned Capt. Longbow. "If you don't meet yourself coming back you'll be arguing for totalitarianism, communist or fascist."

Casual Smith nodded acquiescence. "The one thing that saves me," he said, "is a sort of variation of the law of diminishing returns. There is always a point where progress in one direction becomes, as it were, a liability rather than an asset. The world's highest organism is one that can think for itself; think and reason; man.

"Anything beyond that, the tribe, the nation, are man-made, man-controlled. The most perfect man-made organism, in one direction, is an army; head, limbs and body, feet, arms and stomach. Men are as cells in that organism. 'Theirs not to reason why; theirs but to do and die.' Tennyson's acclaim of the Balaclava heroes is also an indictment of any scheme to construct a nation on army lines. Real progress is only possible where people are permitted to think for themselves and to express their thoughts in word and deed.

"To bring this about and at the same time to play the game of civilized life with efficiency and safety is the problem to be solved. Here again we have the striving for the happy medium. A representative government with a decent respect for the opinions of minorities is the best that man has been able to attain to date. It may yet be demonstrated that we are wise enough and strong enough and brave enough to keep that system of government in times of extra stress and danger. It is a matter which our children and our children's children will have to settle."

"M'yes," said Capt. Longbow with a wicked grin. "And that accounts, I suppose, for our local crop of Wild Bills with pistols."

War By Spring?

By S. Miles Bouton

The Nazi's "Zangengriff" Plan

THAT WAR will come in Europe in the early spring seems unfortunately as nearly assured as a future event of the kind can be. Even such optimists as Ambassador Joseph Kennedy appear to have abandoned hope, or at least stopped predicting that there will be no war. What is looked for is a thrust eastward by Germany through Poland and Czecho-Slovakia against the Ukraine.

Some weeks ago I reported a meeting of the Nazis' supreme leadership council and its decision to make the first move not eastward but westward. Now comes Le Journal de Moscou, a French-language weekly published in Moscow, with the statement that Berlin's talk about "liberating" the Ukrainians is intended to distract the attention of France and Great Britain from coming aggression in the West. Recent events in Germany, not yet reported by the correspondents there, make it at least possible that the Moscow weekly is right.

From a source which has thus far regularly proved well informed there comes to me a report of a conference held at Munich on December 9 and 10, at which Hitler expressed his ideas regarding the Ukraine in the presence not only of Hess, Gen. Keitel, Goering and other men high in the Nazi party, but also of Corporative Minister Feruccio Lantini and Lieut. Gen. Melchiori with staff as representatives of Italy.

GERMANY, said Hitler, has no interest in building up an independent state in the Ukraine. Her interest lay in securing new land under absolute German sovereignty. The inhabitants of the territory in view must either go farther eastward or else be completely subjugated. This, however, could be effected only after a chaotic situation there had been created, and hence Germany's efforts must be directed toward "an organized elimination and systematic destruction of leadership" among the people. Such a process, however, would require a year and a half or two years, and that period would suffice in the meantime to "effectuate in western Europe the necessary conditions of security" for the campaign against the east.

The efforts to create an autonomous state in the Ukraine, Hitler went on, must be only a means to an end. The actual erection of such a state must be prevented. Different groups among the Ukrainians must be supported with the aim of eventually making the territory ripe for conquest.

Both the leaders of the National Socialist Party and of the German general staff are reported to be agreed that the achieving of the goals set by the Fuehrer will not be possible without a preceding war in the west. Despite Prime Minister Chamberlain's "appeasement" policy, they feel that Britain is now determined to intervene if Germany starts eastward, and that she must therefore first assure herself against an attack from the rear. As a result, according to reports which agree with earlier reports, the plan now worked out by the general staff and the Nazi leaders calls for a "Zangengriff," literally tongs (or pincers) grasp by way of the Netherlands.

THIS WOULD CARRY the assault along a line south of The Haag to the Dutch coast, then a march southward through Belgium, with occupation of the Belgian coast and development of the German front from Dunkirk along the Belgian-French border to the German Siegfried line. The eventual aim is to roll up the French Maginot line from the flank by this attack and a simultaneous attack from the Siegfried line. Britain, it is believed, would enter the next war in any event, and hence it would be an unpardonable weakness on Germany's part to spare the small neutrals.

The Nazis believe that a considerable part of the Dutch are already reconciled to accepting the status of a dominion under German sovereignty, especially since the transit of the country would take only a week or so, and guarantees would be given against bombing in the country. Belgium's attitude, it is believed, would depend on that of the Netherlands, and moreover the undermining work of German propagandists there, in connection with the efforts of the Rexists, or Belgian Nazis, would prevent any organized resistance. Both the Netherlands and Belgium would be threatened with the loss of their colonies if they should resist.

This plan is declared to be the result of psychological observations made during the September crisis, especially between September 16 and 30. The Gestapo (Secret Political Police) reported then that the feeling of the people would alter "as soon as a husband begins talking to his wife about going to war." An initial and bloody failure of an assault against the Maginot line, with possible invasion of the Saar and Palatinate by the French, would be intolerable for the German masses. In addition to that would be the soldier's realization that his wife and family might suffer as much as he in a war marked by airplane activities.

THE "ZANGENGRIFF" plan includes attacks by heavy bombing aircraft squadrons on London and other cities, and the compelling of France, by the attack from Belgium, by a German-Italian army on the Pyrenees, and by a frontal attack from the Siegfried line, to scatter her troops throughout the whole country. The German strategists count on America's entrance into the war, but estimate that before American transports could appear the German land troops and air force could make landings impossible. Air bases in the Netherlands could also make the landing of British troops difficult.

Leaders of the Nazis are reported to have termed this whole plan "the most gigantic, boldest and yet simplest plan which man has ever conceived," and that it is "schrecklich" enough "to effectuate political demands, presented under the threat of such a plan, without war."

"Gigantic" as it is, it is but part of the Nazi's determination to dominate Europe—a determination which exists despite the unwillingness of civilized peoples and persons to believe it. To the countries menaced by it one must add Denmark, against which a campaign like that against Czecho-Slovakia is soon to be launched. The inspired German press has for some time been complaining that the Danes do not love the Nazis as much as they should. Not long after the Munich betrayal of Czecho-Slovakia the "Voelkischer Beobachter" wrote:

"We have for a long time been able to point to the fact that a systematic anti-German attitude has been taken by Denmark, and the situation since the four-power fact has assumed a form which demands the sharpest rejection. While the Danish government constantly gives assurances of its correct neutrality, the Danish press publishes the most unheard of attacks on the Third Reich in word and picture. The German national group in North Schleswig, which defends itself against Danish insults, is attacked in the Danish press in an utterly unheard of manner because it defends its interests."

GEN. WILHELM KEITEL.

ACCORDING TO REPORTS dated December 13, a campaign is slated to begin soon against Denmark with the slogan, "Brothers In Need," with emphasis on the solidarity of the German people with "the North Schleswig Germans under Marxist domination." The plan is, after the Nazi propaganda has compelled the Danish government to take counter-measures, to concentrate German troops on the Danish border. The border is so short and Denmark's military resources, thanks to a Socialist regime, are so insignificant, that it is hoped that such a demonstration will suffice to bring about another Munich conference, the result of which would be the cession to Germany of a considerable part of South Jutland.

That, however, according to Nazi calculations, would be only a beginning. Denmark would see herself compelled eventually to accept the status of a German vassal-state, precisely as has Czecho-Slovakia. In case of war, Germany would then dominate the straits between the North and the Baltic Sea, with the prospect of reaching out to Sweden. Then Great Britain and France, the Nazis calculate, would be willing to give back Germany's colonies. That Denmark is gravely concerned about the whole situation is no secret. Unless help came from the west, she could not resist a German invasion.

Nor does all this by any means exhaust the Nazi dreams of European and eventual world hegemony Herr von Bibra, counselor of the German legation in Berne, has been secretly entrusted with the work of furthering the movement for the Anschluss (annexation) of Switzerland to Germany. Von Bibra was counselor to the German legation in Prague until 1935. At that time all National Socialist activity in Czecho-Slovakia was prohibited. The party was dissolved, and the Sudeten German Party did not dare openly align itself with the principles of the Third Reich.

At the end of 1935 it became known through the testimony of a former member of the National Socialist Party that Herr von Bibra had been commissioned by the German Nazis to carry on the work in Czecho-Slovakia. He disappeared immediately and bobbed up in the Legation in Berne. It became known later that he had drawn up the plans for the organization of the National Socialist party in Czecho-Slovakia, and that it was he who appointed Konrad Henlein leader of that party.

THERE IS STILL another Nazi "Fuehrer" to be considered. He is Fritz Delfs, leader of the recently organized National Socialist Party of Tanganyika, the former German East Africa. The Germans there make up about a third of the total white population of the colony, and Herr Delfs declares that he represents all of them. At the birthday celebration for King George he and his staff appeared in brown Nazi shirts.

The anti-Nazi fraction of the Germans and the British population are determined opponents of Hitlerism. The East African Standard declared recently that the Britons living in Tanganika regard it as their home and that they will resist to the uttermost any transfer of the colony to Germany. It added that while they were comparatively few in number, they could count on the support of all other Britons in Africa and of the Union of South Africa.

This whole story of Nazi plans is of course, a story of madness. It could not be otherwise, for it is a story of madmen. Otherwise it would be incredible.

Canton In Captivity

Its Condition After Entry Of Japanese Described

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In October conditions were becoming desperate in Canton. The Japanese military were requisitioning all supplies of rice. Kindling was running very low. All live stock were gradually disappearing from the countryside and vegetables were becoming scarce. Several workers in Hongkong were anxious to come to our rescue and in order to carry on medical work at the Canton Hospital and in the refugee camps doctors and nurses were urgently required.

The Canton Hospital had sent an urgent call for medical help and our emergency relief areas committee arranged with Bishop Hall of the Anglican Church to make plans for a relief ship to bring supplies and personnel. This was very difficult, because the Japanese have attempted to cut off all intercourse between Hongkong and Canton and no Chinese are allowed to move in either direction. Finally a Butterfield and Swire merchant ship, the Wuchang, was chartered and 12 missionaries given permits to come.

It arrived on the twenty-third. On board were a doctor and nurse of the Seventh Day Adventist Mission, who will render assistance to the camp in the eastern part of the city and attempt to reopen their own hospital nearby, Dr. and Mrs. Rose and Miss Green of the English Methodist Mission. The Roses will first be assigned to relief in a hospital just outside of Canton and then will probably come to Lingnan to live and work at Canton Hospital. Miss Green will go straight to Canton Hospital and give full time there.

The Canton Hospital had been closed on October 18 with only a few workmen left. We opened again on the thirty-first. A competent trained nurse was secured and patients were taken in from refugee camps so that by now we have about 40. Miss Green is now starting work there and other Chinese and foreign nurses are in sight. We have taken on several young girls to be trained as aides. The pastor of the church next door has returned and will live in the hospital and carry on work among the pepole in the neighborhood as well as in the hospital.

Fires have by no means ceased. Many villages are still being set on fire by Japanese troops and some of the city fires have been caused by the Chinese themselves. As they see the invaders systematically going from shop to shop taking out all the valuable stocks they consider it better to destroy everything. The best houses and public buildings are being taken over by Japanese soldiers. Many of my friend's homes are now displaying the Japanese flag and are occupied by soldiers who destroy or appropriate everything inside the houses.

The Japanese consul intimated that he wished to inspect the Lingnan campus. Consent was given and he agreed to bring four Japanese with him. Suddenly without warning a party of 40 arrived including several Chinese puppets and interpreters. Dr. Henry was summoned but they had already entered the gate. They wanted to see the refugees so they were allowed to proceed where there was a large group of men, women and children.

These unfortunates had been driven to our camp by ruthless destruction of their homes from bombing, or their homes in the city had been destroyed by fire, or had been entered by Japanese soldiers demanding that all the young girls and women should be turned over to them. Others had had their homes looted of everything that they possessed. Each refugee had been admitted only upon evidence that he had been deprived of his living by the ruthless enemy.

Before these people the Japanese spokesman stood up and through an interpreter announced that the Japanese army was the true friend of the Chinese people. They had come to protect and restore order. Chiang-Kai-shek was the traitor of his people and was a robber and a gangster. Moreover, the American and English and French and Russian people were the enemies of the Chinese and had nothing to give them but harm.

In fact, from now on the Chinese might well turn to the Japanese as their saviours. Therefore they should all leave the refugee camps as soon as possible and return to their homes and open their shops in the city and resume business. This was all said in the presence of Dr. Henry and other members of our staff.

Excerpts From Our Letters

Billions

Mr. Roosevelt's recent statement that this is only a 60 billion dollar country now, is, I believe, grossly inaccurate, except as to the literal figures of national income. I believe his statement should have been adjusted to the lower prices (lower than 1929, when it was 80 billions) prevailing in 1937, whose figure he quotes. Though not an economic expert, I have carefully studied the figures put out by the Government's experts, and it is my considered opinion that, in 1937, we were a 70 billion Nation at least. And this takes no account of a population increase, which I cannot accurately compute in this connection. Perhaps we were still closer to 80 billion. I am wondering if we are not getting close enough to that "80 billion" ideal—and I hope we are!—whether it is not time to begin to cut down, slow up, in—and reduce taxes, so that next year we may again see a moderate but sure and steady gain and perhaps reach—or pass—80,000,000,000?—Harvey MacCauley, Columbus, Ohio.

Project

The writer from her own experience wonders why some other woman who has some of this world's wealth to use for others has not before this time and here in Washington begun a philanthropic project, which might, through good management, be, or become, self-supporting. I mean a place where a woman of 70 years or over, or under, could go and for a fee within her means, pay for a night's lodging, or a meal; or, perhaps, keep a room for her use.—Mrs. Alice E. Berg, Washington.

Oversupply

I note the protest of the Middle-Atlantic Conference of Building Owners and Managers in reference to Government financing of apartment houses. These men are everlastingly right. Today there is an oversupply of apartment and office buildings throughout the Nation. And thus we have another surplus, which under our capitalistic system means simply wreckage. Too much of anything and away we go. Banks, insurance companies, take notice, we are today on thin ice. The New Deal has done plenty of good, but in this field of financing it is surely running wild.—Publico, Washington.

Bible

That was a fine tribute to his mother by Frank Murphy, in using the Bible she gave him, to be sworn in as the new Attorney General. Few of us have used the Bibles our mothers gave us—an hours reading daily—as he has. My Irish mother gave me 'mine Christmas, 1895, and being very proud of it, have read other Bibles in its place, as I did not want to wear it out. Besides, it has rather fine print. Mothers should give their sons large-print Bibles so they can have no excuses to offer for not reading them.—Art Windsor, Detroit.

Hates

Hate generators: (1) Women who rush ahead of turn to stamp windows ignoring "seniority" of people standing in line. (2) Policemen who select choice pieces of candy or fruit from the dealer's display and ignore payment. (3) Women who give murderous glances to men who don't remove their hats in crowded elevators. (4) Sales people—steeped in insincerity—who gush and declare that your choice is "wonderful" and "looks so good on you"—whether it does or not. (5) Insurance men who start off with "What would happen if you were to die tomorrow?" (6) Barbers that say "It's getting a little thin," in order to sell some known worthless tonic. (7) Sales people who declare "This is just as good" when you request a favorite brand. May we have less of all these in 1939!—Neal Boykin, Washington.

Northeast

We of the far Northeast wish to thank The Washington Post for most liberal use of its columns to present our problems, especially flood relief along valley of Watts Run. It is a wonderful Christmas gift to us that flood-relief construction will begin early in 1939 along this oft flood-swept valley. The recreational center for this far Northeast will be realized also in 1939 and our arterial highway, Grant street and Dear avenue will be paved. We look forward to 1939 with renewed hope and inspiration in our long struggle to secure a junior high school for the for Northeast for our poor children, many of whom walk 4 miles to the greatly overcrowded Brown Junior High School at Twenty-fourth street and Benning road northeast. A senior high school at the school center at Kingman Park would be a boon to about 1,000 pupils from the Northeast and Southeast who live east of Eighth street and now attend high school in the Northwest, where all our senior high schools are grouped and are also overcrowded.—Howard D. Woodson, Washington.

Seer

Permit me to prophesy by asserting there will be nothing new in the New Year—but all the old hates and troubles and perennial problems. Some unimportant spot on the face of the earth will become the focal point in an international crisis, and war will be averted by a last-minute song and dance. Nationally, the problem of unemployment and relief will be solved by having further restrictions placed on all those who, having been dislocated in their own trades and professions, seek new starts in other fields. There will be further restrictions as to age and formal education as well as restrictions as to residence. Then those victims of the times will be classed by some bright so-called economist as "unemployable."—R. C. O'Brien, Arlington, Va.

Teachers' Unions

Some Objections To An Editorial Are Raised

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Your leading editorial, "Teachers as Unionists," in the issue of January 2, is difficult to account for except on the grounds that you were hard-pressed for items to fill your editorial page on the day in question or that, as seems to be the case, you deliberately chose to follow the example of the Dies committee in building mountains of sweeping conclusions out of mole-hills of the most doubtful and flimsy evidence concerning the activity and aims of Communists in the trade union movement.

I should like to answer the three contentions set forth in the last two paragraphs of this editorial.

1. You state: Teachers "stand in a special relation to the public, setting them apart from manual workers. They are engaged in performing important public services which preclude exercise of the right to strike." The teacher, the Government worker and other professional and white collar workers require the same guarantees of decent livelihood and security as do manual workers, and like manual workers they are becoming increasingly aware of the identity of interests of all workers and of the fact that the surest means of achieving their needs is though union organization.

The inference in your second sentence, that union organizations can gain their ends solely through exercising the right to strike and exist only for this purpose, is certainly far from the truth. Without ever resorting to the use of the strike the American Federation of Teachers has won dozens of victories in reinstatements, in tenure of rights, in salary restorations, increases, and standardizations, and in defense of academic freedom. It won these victories because, through its affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, it could rally the support of organized labor, both locally and nationally.

2. You state: "Moreover, the teacher, because of his unconscious power to mold the thinking of undeveloped minds, has a special obligation to preserve balanced judgment and to avoid identification with any propagandist movement." Unfortunately, you did not take the trouble to define your terms. What is "balanced judgment," and what is —or is not—a "propagandist movement?" Do you mean that teachers are not supposed to express carefully thought out convictions or opinions upon any subject which is in the least sense controversial? If education is not precisely the function of molding the thinking of undeveloped minds, what is it? And if teachers are not to play an important role in molding these minds, who or what is? Perhaps the movies, or the radio, or The Washington Post?

Actually, the bone of contention is not the question of indoctrination as such, but the question of what kind of indoctrination shall be permitted—what shape the molding shall take. We have indicated above what trade unions stand for.

3. Finally, as the main point of emphasis, which you have been gradually approaching, you state: "Certainly no responsible teacher wishes to be affiliated with an organization into which community elements have insidiously penetrated for the sake of furthering revolutionary aims." The last clause here seems to be stated as an actual fact about which there can be no question. The sole evidence of this fact which the editorial offers is the testimony of Prof. Childs.

Apart from the question of the validity of Prof. Childs' statements in themselves, there is the further question of testimony on the other side of the case. The Post has not seen fit to mention any of these, either in its news columns or in the editorial in question, although press releases have been available. There was the detailed answer by officers of the New York College Teachers Union to the charges made by Prof. Childs.

The conclusion is indisputable that The Post has certainly not exhibited "balanced judgment" in its appraisal of this situation. When the editorial goes even further to generalize about Communists capturing "what are sometimes called 'liberal' movements," one is led to wonder what "propagandist movement" The Post is identified with.

Securer Security

By Ernest Lindley

The Revised Program

NOW THAT the national defense program has gone into the Congressional hopper, the revised and expanded social security program is next on the list.

The Social Security Board has worked out a set of recommendations which go considerably beyond those of the Advisory Council on Social Security, made public last week. The board is concerned with the social security program as a whole, while its advisory council's proposals were limited to old age insurance.

One of the board's aims is to achieve a better balance between help for dependent old people and help for dependent children. When the social security act was first drafted, for reason unknown the Federal Government's concern in the welfare of the oncoming generation was fixed at 33 1-3 per cent, as against 50 per cent in the outgoing generation.

That is, one-third of the cost of aid to children without a breadwinner is paid by the Federal Government and two-thirds by the State government, whereas the cost of assistance to the needy old people is split 50-50 between the Federal Government and the States. Thus there is less inducement for the States to put up money for the children. And as a result the total funds available are nothing like large enough to meet the real needs.

THE OLD PEOPLE have votes and publicity and lobbies. The children have none of these. Actually, sentiment apart, their welfare is more important to the Nation than that of the old people. Certainly there is no basis, constitutional or otherwise—except cold-blooded politics—for giving them less than the old people. The Social Security Board therefore would like to see the Federal Government's contribution to children's aid increased to one-half the total cost. This should encourage the States to put up more of their own money, so that gradually—if the old age pension chasers don't grab it all—there may be enough to take care of the needy children.

The needy old people are not being overlooked, however, in the Social Security Board's survey. The board is bringing up the vexatious question of how best to allocate money for old-age assistance among the States. At present it pays half the cost of each old-age pension up to $30 a month. In the richer States this plan seems to work well enough. The State treasuries put up the money, and in a few instances have added enough to increase pensions even beyond $30 a month. But some of the poorest States are not providing enough money for decent pensions, even when lower living costs and standards are taken into account. And these are the States where a high percentage of old people have no funds of their own and so are in need of Federal-State pensions.

The Social Security Board therefore discreetly suggests that consideration be given to variable grants for old-age assistance. Under such a system the poor States would get more money from the Federal Government, and the rich States less. The formula could be based on the wealth or tax resources of the State. In the poorest States, for example, the Federal Government might pay two-thirds of the cost of each old-age pension, and in the richest States one-third of the cost. The States would retain the right to fix the maximum pensions.

Through variable grants, the Federal Government could bolster up old-age assistance where it is now too low, and perhaps even take care of more people with the same amount of money.

VERY SOON another factor will complicate the old-age assistance plan. That is the old-age insurance system to which most wage earners and their employers make monthly contributions. The insurance system will begin to pay benefits in 1942 at the latest, and in 1940 if the recommendation of the Social Security Board and its advisory council is adopted. The contributors to the insurance system who reach retirement age will receive their benefits as a matter of right, whether they need them or not. Some of them, unquestionably, would otherwise be in such need that they would be eligible for old-age assistance.

As the old-age insurance system begins to pay benefits to retired workers, the industrial areas of the country will have relatively less need for old-age assistance money. But as farmers and farm laborers are not included in the old-age insurance system, benefits paid under this plan will not reduce by very much the need for old-age assistance from public funds in the States which are chiefly agricultural. Thus, to make the old-age insurance and old-age assistance for the needy fit together, it probably will be necessary to have a more flexible formula for allocating Federal money for the latter division of the social security program.

The eventual goal is to bring everybody who works for a living under the insurance system. If that goal is ever reached, then every worker, and his wife, on reaching retirement age, will receive insurance benefits as a right, and there will be little or no need for the system of aid to the needy old people which now bulks so large in the social security program and in the public mind.

A THIRD PROPOSAL of the Social Security Board is that all State agencies handling funds under the social security program be required to establish the merit system. The Social Security Board is under civil service, but many of the State agencies handling social security funds are not. Only 19 of the States administer public assistance—for the aged, for dependent children, and for the blind—under civil service laws or systematic merit system. And only 40 of the State unemployment compensation boards are under civil service or some other kind of merit system.

The Social Security Board has struggled patiently to improve the administration of these funds in the States. But a peculiar passage in the law prevents it from using more than informal persuasion—unless conditions are so bad that it feels justified in resorting to the drastic remedy of cutting off funds. This "remedy" works a hardship on innocent people, the intended beneficiaries of the social security system.

The Social Security Board wants, and undoubtedly should have, the power to drive politics out of the administration of social security in the States. To accomplish this it doesn't seek the authority to hire or fire State employes or to fix individual salaries. It seeks merely the power to require that these State employes be chosen under a bona fide merit system.

The experience of the Social Security Board is worth the examination of all who are demanding that the administration of the WPA program be turned over to the States. The plain fact is that, with few exceptions, the administrative standards of State government are far below those of the Federal Government. Nearly all the politics in WPA came from the inroads of State and local machines. WPA was, and still is, a temporary agency outside the civil service.

The Social Security Board is a permanent agency operating under the classified civil service, and manned at the top with first-rate administrators. The demand that politics be eradicated from the social security system is coming not from the States, nor from Congress—but from the Social Security Board itself, an agency of the executive branch of the Federal Government. Congress, however, may be willing to help take the State social security agencies out of politics. For the loss of patronage will be suffered not by Senators and Representatives but by the Governors and State party bosses.

THE SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD'S recommendations will include the chief revisions of the old-age insurance system proposed by its advisory council. These include moving forward to January 1, 1940, the date on which old-age benefits will begin to be paid, liberalizing the benefits in the early years of the system, and extending the coverage to wage earners who are now excluded. It looks, however, as if domestic servants and farm laborers, as well as self-employed people, would have to wait a while longer before they are included, as the technical problems of collecting their contributions haven't been completely worked out yet.

Under the proposed revision of the old-age insurance system there will be a supplementary benefit for the aged wife of an insured worker. And if the worker dies before his children become of age there will be benefits for each child and for his widow until all the children have grown up.

The Social Security Board's proposals lack the note of sensationalism to which the public ear has been attuned by the old-age pension lobbies. They are based on the supposition that the American people are intelligent enough to want a well-administered, well-rounded social security system—one which will work.

ASPHODEL

By Faith Henderson.

I shouldhave known your love would not endure
The moment that you saw my feet of clay.
I ask no empty pardon, but inure
My heart to bear the burden and essay
My journey on through life; I will not shed
Tears of self pity that will sting my cheek.
A friendship, that by flattery is fed,
In time grows pallid and its roots are weak.
It has no stamina to bear the force
Of clashing wills; opinions then will chide
The loved one's slightest word, lest cloying sauce
Be poured with lavish hand on wounded pride.
The Asphodel, symbol of death and sorrow!
But Heliotrope will bloom for me tomorrow.

BOOKS

A Week-End Review of Current Publications

Of Louis Aragon

By Katherine de Montalant

WITH THE PUBLICATION of "Residential Quarter," Louis Aragon shows himself a writer of real stature. "The Bells of Basel" was excellent and we hoped for more; now he promises an oeuvre, a full body of work that will impose itself as an inescapable feature of the landscape, that we can walk around and examine. Its final nature will rest partly with Aragon and partly with the condition of the world. But whether he has the time and opportunity to complete his work so that it will spread like a mountain range, or whether it will remain a solitary rising from the plain, it is already big and that is enough for gratitude.

It is big, yet so well laid out, so balanced that it is easily followed and comprehended. The first volume, "The Bells of Basel" dealt with the characters of Wisner, automobile magnate and his mistress Diane; with Catherine Simonidze, daughter of a beautiful Georgian adventures; with Catherine's first love, the army officer, Jean. And through Catherine the story reached to Victor, a taxi driver and militant socialist, and ended with the socialist congress at Basel in 1912.

The book closed with a tribute to Clara Zetkin, the German socialist, and promised—an inspired and inspiring promise—that the author would sing the romance of the modern woman. He holds up Clara Zetkin as the prototype of the woman of the future, possibly of today. Catherine, who has held most of the book, is the muddled fumbling girl who may reach to cleanliness and the new beauty; while Diane, the courtesan, is the paid beauty of an earlier epoch. It is, of course, nothing like so simple as this, but that is one of the larger morals of the story. And there are, perhaps a hundred other characters in varying ranks of the social scale and of varying degrees of human meanness and generosity, vision and blindness.

"RESIDENTIAL QUARTER" starts in the south provincial town of Serianne. Among countless characters and their stories, the book gradually comes to center on young Armand Barbentane, son of an atheistical doctor and his fanatically religious wife. Armand's brother, Joseph Quesnel, whom we met in the last book merely as the head of a taxi company, a girl, Carlotta, whom both Quesnel and Edmond love, furnish another motif. This book, too, ends on a lyric note in the summer of 1913, when Armand, who has been literally starving for a month, finally gets a job as strike-breaker in the Wisner factories and after three days, decides to join the union.

LOUIS ARAGON.

M. Aragon has now brought two youths, Catherine and Armand, to a vision of the people of France as opposed to the powerful amongst whom they were born. At the same time he has brought them to the edge of the World War. Over both books, over the lives of all the people in them, loom the two facts of the period—socialism with its great leader, Jaures, and the war with its international promulgators.

IT HAS BEEN suggested that Aragon has much in common with Dos Passos; but the similarity is very superficial. It lies mostly in the fact that both gain a panoramic effect at the same time as they tell an integrated story. Both, too, are what one might call "tough" writers; that is, they call spades spades an duse them frequently. But his far greater range in incident and character and feeling, his far greater intellectual content must finally put Aragon out of reach of any such comparison.

Furthermore, he writes from the standpoint of a very definite philosophy or politic. This binds his books together, give them a strength that no amount of disinterested observation can ever attain. He has found and made his own the conception of the brotherhood of man as concretely and with as all-embracing results as St. Francis ever discovered our Lady Poverty, or Bunyan discovered Grace Abounding. And it is this basic strength of a man of faith that illumines his poet's vision and the workings of his mind.

IN HIS EXCELLENT preface to "Residential Quarter," the translator, Haakon Chevalier, says of Aragon's career, "From Surrealism to Socialist Realism is a long step . . . But while his work since 1930 does spring from a fundamental reorientation of his whole being, involving a literary rebirth, his new work is not wholly a denial of his early work. His very first writings are concerned with the problem of reality."

It is this concern with reality that should reassure the comfortable scepticism that makes most of us view converts and their works with suspicion. The proud and perhaps presumptuous title that Aragon has elected for his whole work, the Real World, suggests that he will not be guilty of the vulgarization of his art to poster-propaganda shadings where industrialists are all wicked and workers virtuaus. His thesis is too strong to need such weak supports. He knows that he can give all possible credit to the other side and his own stand will only be the stronger. At the same time he has too much enlightened hardness to be sentimental over this or that person merely because they are "of god will."

As nearly as a man can, with the light and shade and emphasis provided by his faith, he paints what is. He has brought to his work the discipline of training in an art highly divorced from flesh and blood. That training has taught him to leave out inessentials, to produce moments of piercing poetry—moments only where a more self-indulgent artist would please himself with pages—moments of extreme horror which also pass. And at times he is eloquent with a richness and fervor that have been lacking in French literature since the prewar Proust noted his exaltations on such different themes.

ARAGON HAS idiosyncracies and mannerisms that are often annoying. He commands a kind of Gothic horror that is often hard to stomach. "The Bells of Basel" was by no means wholly satisfactory and "Residential Quarter," though it continues the improvement one felt developing in the earlier novel, has spots that need loosening, has an occasional dryness of tone. But before the complex mass of the whole and the true spirit that informs it, these matters seem of not very great importance. "Liking" for this or that detail is unimportant when, to the construction of a real world, a real, a living man brings his force.

"RESIDENTIAL QUARTER" by Louis Aragon; translated by Haakon M. Chevalier (Harcourt, Brace, $2.50.)

Diagnosis And Prognosis

"SEEDS OF DESTRUCTION," by John Blair. (Covici-Friede, $3.)

THIS IS a timely book that should be read by lawmakers and public servants, by professors and students, by preachers and housewives, but might well be left alone by captains of industry and financiers.

In clear simple style the author traces the basic technological and economic causes of our distressed economic system. He shows that our possibilities of fuller life are thwarted by the inability of the system to make use of them. He proves that the profit system can no longer be profitable.

If our economic ups and downs are to be compared with a roller-coaster, now reaching dizzy heights and then sliding in breath-taking fashion to the lower depths—we shan't forget that there is a chain and a motor under the structure that first hoists the pleasure car to the top. The seeds of destruction have germinated; weeds have grown and entangled the prime mover.

Anatomy Of A Hotel

"LIFE CLASS," by Ludwig Momelmans. (Viking Press, $2.50.)

BEHIND THE SCENES in a swank hotel is ten times as interesting and very nearly as luxurious as out in front, according to Mr. Bremelmans. And who would know better than he who was everything from a grape-swiping busboy to assistant banquet manager in New York's finest. His style of earnest, innocent seriousness is as well adapted to this subject as to anything he has written, for it enables him to be ironic, really serious or just plain funny in a way that keeps the reader on his toes to discover which. Anyone who has ever been terrified by a fishy-eyed headwaiter or wondered what a waiter thought of his patrons will find the book fascinating. The whole hierarchy of the smart hotel is explained with all its privileges, jealousies and conflicts, which included even a small-scale world war.

"Life Class" has been called one of the funniest of the season, which is true enough, but in addition, the subject is one which is in itself wholly and delightfully appealing.

International Labor Index

"YEARBOOK OF LABOR STATISTICS." (International Labor Office, Geneva, $1.50.)

THE NEW ISSUE contains, as usual, the most complete statistics of all countries on employment and unemployment, hours of work, wages, cost of living and retail prices, workers' family budgets, migration and industrial disputes. Several new series have been added, especially on national indexes of employment, wages in coal mining and agriculture.

Notes help the reader to compare the figures given for different countries. Statistical data for the United States are included in almost all the tables; in many cases not only the data of the Bureau of Labor Statistics but also those of the National Industrial Conference Board are given.

Fox Chasers

"FOXHUNTING IS DIFFERENT," by Samuel J. Henry, 950 copies. Illustrated by Paul Brown. (Derrydale Press, $7.50.)

Mr. Henry sets out to tell why it is that men, in pink coats and otherwise, bruise, bump and variously harass themselves in trying to catch a fox. He knows hunters and their natures and habits pretty thoroughly and he winds up with sundry conclusions, some of them quite interesting. There are profiles of various fox hunting types and chapters devoted to hunting experiences. There is no finish in either the dialogue or the characterization. Some of the conclusions seem to leap too quickly out of enthusiasms. But the book is loaded with hunting wisdom, and to fox hunters that should be enough.

Anatomist Of The Common Law

The Little Known Man Behind The Well Known Books

By Huntington Cairns.

BLACKSTONE MEANS to most of us four volumes on the English common law. Mr. Lockmiller concludes that it is strange that we know practically nothing of the man who wrote them. These four volumes are among the best-known books in the English-speaking world; they have influenced American life, institutions and phraseology more, Mr. Lockmiller thinks, than almost any other work. Blackstone, however, is not a personality to us but a book. It is this anomalous situation that Mr. Lockmiller proposes to correct.

William Blackstone lived in the eighteenth century, he was unusually versatile, he suffered from gout, and he did not like physical exercise. Although he was born in Cheapside, London, he died knighted and mourned by his king. He was born poor, and by the time he was 12 years old he was also an orphan, but a benevolent uncle sent him to the Charterhouse School and paid his fees. Mr. Lockmiller reprints an old picture of the Charterhouse and briefly gives its history with a list of some of the distinguished men who learned their Latin and Greek in its halls.

Blackstone went on to Oxford, where he received the degree of bachelor of civil law. He then came to "that labyrinth of ancient buildings known as the Temple" to continue his study of the common law. Mr. Lockmiller gives also a brief history of the three English law societies, an account of the eighteenth century life that went on within their walls and a few words about their architecture—the Middle Temple Hall Mr. Lockmiller considers the best example of Tudor domestic architecture in all England. Blackstone found there no regular lectures, no readable texts and a system which required the eating of 60 dinners at stated intervals in the presence of the benchers and the paying of fees to entitle the student to be called to the bar.

SIR WILLIAM BLACKSTONE

PERHAPS THE FACT that will first attract our sympathy to the man Blackstone was his early failure to secure clients. This failure caused him to retire to Oxford where he delivered his famous lectures. For the first time in history the common law of England was recognized by a leading university and placed on a basis with the civil law of Rome which had been taught in that institution for centuries. This professorship was the forerunner of college legal education in America, and it revived the teaching of common law in England. As the lectures became famous, pirated copies began to appear. Blackstone was forced to publish them himself in order to insure an accurate edition.

Mr. Lockmiller stresses the influence of Blackstone on the American colonies. In immitation of the chair of common law founded for Blackstone at Oxford by Mr. Viner's will there was another founded at William and Mary at Williamsburg, Va. It can safely be assumed, Mr. Lockmiller adds, that practically all lawyers in the United States prior to 1900, at one time or another, read all or parts of the "Commentaries." Copies of this work were the prize possession of the Founding Fathers, who wrote into our Constitution not only Blackstone's ideas but his phraseology. Mr. Lockmiller feels that one of the strongest ties between Britain and the United States today is the legal system which we have in common.

But Mr. Lockmiller is not all praise. Blackstone sat in Parliament from 1761 until he was appointed judge on the Court of Common Please in 1770; as a legislator he was conservative and supported the Crown. In Mr. Lockmiller's eyes conservatism is not in the best of taste; he even goes so far as to tell us how Blackstone should have acted and what bills he should have supported. In the "Commentaries" Blackstone is also conservative, but about that Mr. Lockmiller is more tolerant: he argues that Blackstone was stating what the law was; that in a statement of the law he was limited by his material.

HOWEVER, JEREMY BENTHAM was not so lenient; he was the bitterest and most damaging critic of the "Commentaries." He was particularly annoyed by Blackstone's statement of the doctrine of sovereignty. The blasts that came from him and his pupil, John Austin, resulted in bringing to Blackstone's defense the outstanding figures of the day and of later times. Gibbon, Burke, Pollock and Dicey came forward to acclaim the "Commentaries," the perspicuity of its style, the conciseness of its delineation, its fascination as a literary classic, its success in presenting for the first time the whole field of English law. And Mr. Holdsworth, who today fills the chair created for Blackstone, has written that Blackstone was a literary artist who laid the foundation of the present English legal system.

When Blackstone found himself famous he left Oxford and returned to private practice. Clients were then plentiful: he was able to marry, buy an estate—Priory Manor in Wallingford—raise a large family and grow very fat. He died at 57 of dropsy.

THE VERSATILITY of Blackstone apparently was the result of his thoroughness. His mastery of mathematics led him to become interested in architecture. This hobby he was able to gratify by directing the completion of the library of All Souls College. His study of Greek and Roman poetry caused him to want to compose verses, too; a few of his poems are included by Mr. Lockmiller in the appendix to his book. Shakespeare soon became his favorite poet; this enthusiasm led him to compile the notes which Edmund Malone, the great Shakespearean scholar, included in his edition of "Shakespeare's Plays." Malone described Blackstone as "one of the most eminent literary characters that the present age has produced."

When the job of rejuvenating the Oxford press fell upon Blackstone's shoulders he did not hesitate to equip himself by mastering all there was to be known about printing. It was also Blackstone's thoroughness as judge that directed his attention to the need of prison reform; in fact, it is Blackstone as well as Bentham who should be credited with the nineteenth century prison reforms that came after their deaths.

MR. LOCKMILLER'S book is not long, and it is not technical, but the known details of Blackstone's life are so meager that he has resorted to a rich flavoring of the eighteenth century and has also drawn heavily on those "Commentaries" from which he hoped to free Blackstone that he might stand as a personality. The appendices consume almost half the space of the book; they include the poems cited above, a lecture Blackstone gave on the study of law, the argument he presented in his most famous case, Perrin vs. Blake, an outline of the "Commentaries," the address by Mr. Wickersham at the presentation of a statue of Blackstone by the American Bar Association to the British bar and an extensive bibliography.

Amateur Economics

By John M. Blair.

ECONOMICS as a science possesses many peculiar characteristics. One is that it is perhaps the only domain of thought about which it is possible to write and publish a book without undergoing the odious task of studying the subject.

The result of this has been that books and books on economics have rolled off the presses, especially in recent years. The books by scholars representing years of creative effort have been obscured by the very flood of books written by cranks, romanticists, dogmatists and outright screwballs. One of the principal groups to the subject, but seldom to the science, of economics, consists of businessmen. Through the mystical mental peregrinations of publishers, the situation has now reached the point where a businessman who becomes afflicted with something vaguely described as "a social viewpoint," is automatically transformed into an "authoritative economist."

This reviewer has no particular grievance against businessmen, but he does possess a very real grievance against anyone who writes and publishes a book on economics without being acquainted with at least some part of the vast amount of scholarly research and writings which comprise the foundation of the science.

In "Where Does America Go From Here?" Mr. Baggs discusses some trends in our economy which should be self-evident to anyone who has gone through a high school course in civics or American history. His manner of presentation, which consists of short, dogmatic paragraphs—described by the publisher as "quick, bold strokes"—does not make for interesting reading. And finally, he presents practically no factual material at all to support his conclusions. In fact, the one virtue of the book is its fortunate brevity.

One of the better works from the minds of businessmen is "Toward Full Employment," by Messrs. Dennison, Filene, Flanders and Leeds. These men have delved somewhat extensively into the subject of taxation and its place in the economic system. Particularly have they examined the income tax. Surprisingly enough, for businessmen, they have come out in favor of it. The precise relationship, though, between a technique utilized in raising part of the funds required for public expenditures and the title of the book, "Toward Full Employment," remains a little vague.

The third book, "Our Promised Land," is not by a businessman, and is a very good piece of work. The title refers not to some nebulous Valhalla, to be attained through the enactment of some specific nostrom, but to the potentialities which exist in that far-off area known vaguely to the average citizen as the "great Northwest." The book is a sociological economic portrayal of what Mr. Neuberger calls our "last frontier."

In vivid, almost journalistic style, he tells the story of the Northwest, he describes the great Grand Coulee Dam—the "biggest thing on earth"—and what its electricity and irrigation will mean to the people of that area and to the destitute drought sufferers; he writes of the intense labor warfare between Beck and Bridges; he recounts and analyzes the cock-eyed politics of the State of Washington; the politics, the class alignments, the economic patterns and, most important, the attitudes, beliefs and ideals of the people inhabiting this vast area, all come into his purview. The book is stimulating and well written. On reading it, though, certain questions do come to mind. For example, where are the markets to be found for the large amounts of new and additional agricultural produce to be raised on this "last frontier" after it is developed!

"TOWARD FULL EMPLOYMENT," by Dennison, Filene, Flanders & Leeds. (Whittlesey House, $2.50.)

"OUR PROMISED LAND," by Richard L. Neuberger. (Macmillan, $3.)

The Minor Muse

"TO GROW NEW BEAUTY," by Mavor Moore: includes a sonnet sequence called "Mushiknava" (The Musk-Deer), a legend of India.

"THIS LIVING URGE," by Lorraine Patterson, of Washington, D. C.: adept love sonnets and lyrics in the modern mode.

"SMOKE AROUND THE SUN," by Gladys Brown Denison: poignant and promising are these poems by a Wisconsin social worker. They are genuine because she feels deeply.

"QUEST OF THE SINGING TREE," by Robert F. Hein, of Baltimore: a young poet's first book of verse. Philosophic and religious themes competently handled. Odes to Poe, Chaucer, Shakespeare and Stravinsky.

"JULIE'S SUCH A PRETTY LADY," by Eleanor Herrick: verse with more enthusiasm than poetic merit.

"COLLECTED POEMS," by Joseph S. Cotter, sr.: mostly Negro themes, by one who has been a teacher and principal in the Louisville public schools for 50 years.

"THE CREOLE OF THE MISSION," by Julius M. Richardson:: a long narrative symbolic poem in heroic couplets, and a few others.

Made In England

By Evelyn Page

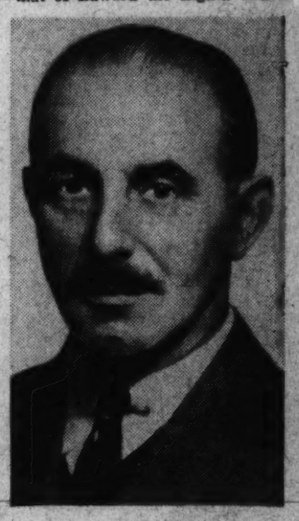
ONLY AN ENGLISHMAN could have written Gilbert Frankau's "Royal Regiment." That only an Englishman could read it with sympathy and understanding I do not dare to say, for many Americans seem to have applauded his earlier novels. But certainly the average reader-citizen of these United States will have to adjust his mental and moral values and put control on his sense of humor before he can get rapt away by the complications of the story.

At its opening, Maj. Thomas ("Rusty" to his friends) Rockingham, along with the other officers of the mess of the Royal Artillery, suffers a severe shock when Col. Sir Guy Wethered, D. S. O., M. C., says, "Gentlemen, I give you the health of our new King, Edward the Eighth." He should according to sacred tradition, have said "Gentlemen, the K[illegible]." His unusual toast shows "Rusty" Rockingham and the rest of the E[illegible] army what an extraordinary fellow Sir Guy is. They already know (and this reinforces their opinion of him) that Sir Guy after a short [illegible] dramatic courtship has married an American, a woman 20 years yo[illegible]r than he, and beautiful.

When Rockingham meets Camilla Wethered, he finds her charm[illegible]. Each has an attraction for the other, and it occurs to Sir Guy, who is somewhat cruelly amused, that they may fall in love. Not that he intends to interfere with the process. He intends to watch it. Whatever happens, he knows that he will not allow himself to be robbed of his Camilla. Besides, Rockingham is a "pukka Sahib.' He is too much the man of discipline, the man of honor, the man of integrity, to lust after another's wife.

AFTER A STIMULATING week-end at the Wethereds', Rockingham returns to his quarters to be confronted with the emotional difficulties of Lance-Sergeant Godden who has involved himself with another sergeant's wife, and who is not allowed to re-engage (re-enlist) until he has given up his illicit amour. To Rockingham there are no two sides to the question. Godden must behave as decency and the law demand, whatever his personal suffering.

Much later, when Rockingham realizes that he himself has fallen in love with Camilla Wethered, he realizes what it is that he has urged the submissive Lance-Sergeant to do. In the meantime, there are rumors of another extra-conventional romance—that of Edward the Eighth and a certain lady, much divorced. In each case, whatever the circumstances and whatever the conclusion, the struggle is between love and duty, between a man's emotions and his code.



GILBERT FRANKAU.

This reflection of "Rusty" Rockingham's dilemma in both a higher and a lower social sphere might easily make the framework of a smart, readable novel, but the possibilities of "Royal Regiment" are stultified by the rigidity and its dullness. The story is clogged with army shop talk, obscured with technical slang, slowed to the point of stopping with side issues. Its morality is, to say the least, uncertain, for Rockingham is preserved from a break with his code (the code itself is not entirely straightforward) not by any will of his own but by a set of entirely fortuitous occurrences.

If you are willing to swallow all this, you will find scenes and characters in the book that are entertaining. If you want to enjoy it as a whole you must, as I said to begin with, subdue your wits to the dicta of His Majesty's services. You can check on yourself by deciding whether the wording of Sir Guy's toast is of importance to you. If any but the phrase, "Gentlemen, the King," shocks you, then "Royal Regiment" is your stuff.

"ROYAL REGIMENT," by Gilbert Frankau. (Dutton, $2.50.)

FREE... TO NEW MEMBERS

Joseph in Egypt, by Thomas Mann

—or any of the other Book-Dividends listed in coupon

If you decide to join the Book-of-the-Month Club now, we will give you free, as a new member, a novel which has been acclaimed as "perhaps the greatest creative work of the twentieth century"—JOSEPH IN EGYPT, by Thomas Mann (two volumes, boxed, retail price $5.00). This was one of the recent book-dividends of the Club. Or, if you prefer, you may choose one of the other recent book-dividends listed in the coupon.

Why miss in 1939—as you did in 1938—so many new books you would deeply enjoy?

THE self-examination provided at the left will show the degree to which you may have allowed procrastination to keep you from reading new books which you want very much to read. Over 200,000 families—persons like yourself—have found a subscription to the Book-of-the-Month Club a really effectual means of solving this problem.

You are not obliged, as a member of the Club, to take the book-of-the-month its judges choose. Nor are you obliged to buy one book every month from the Club.

Publishers submit all their important books to us. These go through the most careful reading routine now in existence. At the end of this sifting process, our five judges choose one book as the book-of-the-month.

You receive a carefully written report about this book in advance of its publication. If you decide from this report that it is a book you really want, you let it come to you. If not, you merely sign and mail a slip, saying, "Don't want it."

You Still Browse In Bookstores

Scores of other recommendations are made to help you choose among all new books with discrimination.

If you want to buy one of these from the Club, you can get it by merely asking for it. Or you can use these reports (we find that most of our members do) to guide you in buying these miscellaneous recommended books from a favored bookseller.

In other words, instead of limiting your reading, this system widens it. You can browse among the books as always, but now do it intelligently; you know what to look for.

Once and for all this system really keeps you from missing the new books you want to read. You do actually buy and read those you want, instead of confessing sadly to friends, "I never got around to reading that!"

In addition, there is a great money-saving. Time and again our judges' choices are books you ultimately find yourself buying anyway, because they are so widely talked about. (Outstanding examples of these in 1938 were THE YEARLING, WITH MALICE TOWARD SOME, THE HORSE AND BUGGY DOCTOR, and a list of others too long to include here.) For every two books-of-the-month you buy you receive, free, one of our book-dividends.

Free Books You Get

These book-dividends represent a unique system of saving through quantity production. The resulting economy is extraordinary. For every $1 you spend for a book-of-the-month you actually receive over 75¢ back in the form of free books.

Some of the actual book-dividends distributed within recent months is the best indication of what can be done by this system: they included BARTLETT'S FAMILIAR QUOTATIONS (a special $6 edition); JOSEPH IN EGYPT (2 vols., $5); the Pulitzer Prize edition of ANDREW JACKSON, by Marquis James ($5); MADAME CURIE, by Eve Curie ($3.50); THE ARTS, by Van Loon ($3.95). These books were given to members—not sold, mind you!

What's Your Obligation

You pay no yearly sum to belong to the Book-of-the-Month Club. You pay nothing, except for the books you buy.

Your only obligation as a member is to agree to buy four books-of-the-month a year from the Club. These may be either current or past selections.

BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB, Inc., 385 Madison Ave., N. Y. N21

Please enroll me as a member. It is understood that I am to receive, free, the book checked below, that I am also to receive, without expense, your monthly magazine which reports about current books, and that for every two books-of-the-month I purchase from the Club, I am to receive the current book-dividend then being distributed. For my part, I agree to purchase at least four books-of-the-month a year from the Club.

Miss Davies, Daughter Of Envoy, Is Betrothed

Romance Follows Father's Transfer to Post Of U. S. Ambassador to Belgium; Will Become Bride of Robert L. Grosjean

By Hope Ridings Miller

The Post Society Editor.

AT A SMALL TEA given yesterday at Pierre's in New York City, Mrs. Knight Davies, of Washington, announced the engagement of her daughter, Emlen Knight Davies, to Robert Leon Grosjean, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Grosjean, of Brussels, Belgium.

Among the guests were the bride-elect's brother-in-law and sister, Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings, who went to New York especially to attend the event. They will return to Washington tomorrow.

Miss Davies' father, formerly United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union, is now Ambassador to Belgium, where both Mrs. Tydings and Miss Davies visited him the past summer.

MISS DAVIES was graduated from Holton-Arms School and from Vassar College in 1938. She made her debut here and was presented at the Court of St. James' in 1935. Her college course, continued after she made her bow to society, including a period of study at the University of Moscow, where she spent a winter when her father was envoy to the Soviet Union.

The prospective bridegroom is a reserve lieutenant in the Premier Regiment de Guide of the Belgian calvary. He studied at Le Rosey School in Switzerland, attended Princeton University, class of 1932, and was graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He is now in London, where he is connected with the London offices of General Foods.

MR. GROSJEAN'S father is prominent in banking circles in Europe and his mother, an American, formerly lived in Evansville, Ind. He and his parents have spent much time in this country and are widely known in New York.

The courtship, which began a couple of years ago, was culminated the past summer when Miss Davies was abroad. She went over in July with Mrs. Mead

If you don't know your lines for the Junior League Follies scheduled to hold its opening night February 3 at the Belasco Theater, you can do all your explaining to Mrs. Donald McKnew and Mrs. Crosby Boyd, whose pictures appear directly above. They're in charge of making rehearsals go as smoothly as possible and here they are right on the job. In the circle are Mrs. Atherton Macoydray, head of publicity for the show, and Harlan Dixon, who has to see that the skits are laugh-ful and fool-proof. On the right is Mrs. Philip Young, daughter-in-law of Owen D. Young. Mrs. Young will go bouffant in the Waltz Number. With her in this picture is her cocker spaniel, Sir Tristram

BREATHES THERE A MAN with soul so dead who could possibly forget who glorified the American girl? Lest there be one Washingtonian with so brief a memory, we recall to you the great Zeigfeld and, in case you haven't heard, we hasten to inform you that the Junior League Follies will be closely patterned after the glorious Zeigfeld Follies. Harlan Dixon, co-director with Ray Walsh, among other claims to Broadway fame, staged all the dance numbers for the Zeigfeld show that starred Marilyn Miller and the Astaires. Ray Walsh has been in scores of New York hits and was dance director for Paramount shorts. As a matter of fact, everything in the J. L. Follies except the cast will be professional.

Latest additions to the cast are Adelaide Morgan, who has a lovely voice and has studied singing for several years; Mrs. E. Robert Kinnebrew, colutura soprano who at one time toured the country with Martinelli; Phil Gore and A. Z. Wood, who will do a bit of twirling and singing, and Julian Greene, Dick Walsh and John Slidell, who will shine in a comedy skit. Mail orders for tickets are now being received and the box-office will be open January 30.

CLIMAXING A WEEK of marvelous parties, many in honor of those two most scintillating personalities, Noel Coward and Beatrice Lillie, was the dinner and after-theater supper given last night at the Tommy Thomases. Visiting Helen Thomas over the week-end are Mrs. Armstrong Gwynn and Mrs. Dwight Wiman, from New York . . . From the gourmet's viewpoint, the dinner deserving honorable mention this week was the small one given the other night by Floyd Waggaman and his son, Bob. The delicacies that drew the most groans from guests who were repeatedly faced with new and irresistible courses, were terrapin cooked to a king's taste and breast of guinea hen. Partaking

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

WITH TRUE democratic enthusiasm for royalty, which in America always eclipses that shown by any other country, Washington society is already buzzing excitedly about the visit here several months hence of no less than one King, one Queen, and two Crown Princes and Princesses. As though the scheduled stay of the British monarch and his wife weren't enough excitement for one season, immediately following or preceding them to the Capital will come Crown Prince Olav and Princess Martha of Norway and Crown Prince Frederick and Princess Ingrid of Denmark.

In comparison with the hundreds of thousands of words already writtetn on the English royal family, practically nothing is known here in America about the other visitors. Most of us are aware, for example, that King George VI is very much a family man, that he founded a summer camp where rich and poor boys might mingle; that Queen Elizabeth's taste in dress runs to white fox furs and pastel colored dresses. But did you know that Crown Prince Olav is a skiing and yachting expert and that one of Crown Prince Frederick's chief interests is music, especially symphony orchestras?

NORWAY'S ROYAL PAIR will arrive April 26 on the Oslofjord, flagship of the Norwegian line. Like the Danish Crown Prince and his wife, who land in New York May 7, the couple will be guests of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt at Hyde Park for several days. They will then go to New York, where May 1 the prince will open the Norwegian Pavilion at the World's Fair. Crown Prince Frederick will officiate in a similar capacity for Denmark at the Fair grounds.

Tall, blonde and strongly built, Norway's prince looks like the outdoors man which he is. Since his early youth he has been an intrepid skier and has taken part in many ski events, among them the famous Holmenkillen jumping competition. With the Crown Prince at the helm, his famous six-meter yachts have won a great number of national and international races.

The prince and his bride, who is a niece of King Gustaf of Sweden, live a healthy, simple life at their estate, Skaugum, in the hills outside Oslo, overlooking the fjord. They participate in all

Netherlands Minister, Wife Feted at Dinner

The Minister of the Netherlands and Mme. Loudon were honor guests last evening at a dinner given by the Naval Attache of the Netherlands Legation and Mme. Meijer Ranneft.

The dinner took place at the Ranneft's residence on Alaska avenue, and both the drawing room and the dining table were banked with blue Iris. Candles of the same shade of blue completed the color scheme on the dining table. Mme. Ranneft wore a dinner gown of black crepe.

Guests were Rear Admiral George T. Pettengill and Mrs. Pettengill, Rear Admiral Ralston S. Holmes and Mrs. Holmes, and the Naval Attache of the British Embassy, Capt. St. J. Cuzon-Howe, and Mrs. Curzon-Howe.

Woodrings Feted By Col. Williams

The Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring were ranking guests at dinner last evening given by Col. and Mrs. John F. Williams at the Army-Navy Country Club.

Other guests at Col. and Mrs. Williams' dinner were Senator and Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, Mrs. Genevieve Thomson, the sister of Senator Clark; the Chief of the Field Artillery, Maj. Gen. Robert M. Danford, and Mrs. Danford and Edward F. Villmare.

Final "At Home" Set

The Chief of Staff and Mrs. Malin Craig will observe their last "at home" of the season at their quarters, Fort Myer, Va., on Sunday, February 5, from 4 until 6 o'clock.

Of Louis Aragon

By Katherine de Montalant

WITH THE PUBLICATION of "Residential Quarter," Louis Aragón shows himself a writer of real stature. "The Bells of Basel" was excellent and we hoped for more; now he promises an oeuvre, a full body of work that will impose itself as an inescapable feature of the landscape, that we can walk around and examine. Its final nature will rest partly with Aragon and partly with the condition of the world. But whether he has the time and opportunity to complete his work so that it will spread like a mountain range, or whether it will remain a solitary rising from the plain, it is already big and that is enough for gratitude.

It is big, yet so well laid out, so balanced that it is easily followed and comprehended. The first volume, "The Bells of Basel" dealt with the characters of Wisner, automobile magnate and his mistress Diane; with Catherine Simonidze, daughter of a beautiful Georgian adventures; with Catherine's first love, the army officer, Jean. And through Catherine the story reached to Victor, a taxi driver and militant socialist, and ended with the socialist congress at Basel in 1912.

The book closed with a tribute to Clara Zetkin, the German socialist, and promised—an inspired and inspiring promise—that the author would sing the romance of the modern woman. He holds up Clara Zetkin as the prototype of the woman of the future, possibly of today. Catherine, who has held most of the book, is the muddled fumbling girl who may reach to cleanliness and the new beauty; while Diane, the courtesan, is the paid beauty of an earlier epoch. It is, of course, nothing like so simple as this, but that is one of the larger morals of the story. And there are, perhaps a hundred other characters in varying ranks of the social scale and of varying degrees of human meanness and generosity, vision and blindness.

"RESIDENTIAL QUARTER" starts in the south provincial town of Serianne. Among countless characters and their stories, the book gradually comes to center on young Armand Barbentane, son of an atheistical doctor and his fanatically religious wife. Armand's brother, Joseph Quesnel, whom we met in the last book merely as the head of a taxi company, a girl, Carlotta, whom both Quesnel and Edmond love, furnish another motif. This book, too, ends on a lyric note in the summer of 1913, when Armand, who has been literally starving for a month, finally gets a job as strike-breaker in the Wisner factories and after three days, decides to join the union.

LOUIS ARAGON.

M. Aragon has now brought two youths, Catherine and Armand, to a vision of the people of France as opposed to the powerful amongst whom they were born. At the same time he has brought them to the edge of the World War. Over both books, over the lives of all the people in them, loom the two facts of the period—socialism with its great leader, Jaures, and the war with its international promulgators.

IT HAS BEEN suggested that Aragon has much in common with Dos Passos; but the similarity is very superficial. It lies mostly in the fact that both gain a panoramic effect at the same time as they tell an integrated story. Both, too, are what one might call "tough" writers; that is, they call spades spades an duse them frequently. But his far greater range in incident and character and feeling, his far greater intellectual content must briefly put Aragon out of reach of any such comparison.

Farthermore, he writes from the standpoint of a very definite philosophy or politic. This binds his books together, give them a strength that no amount of disinterested observation can ever attain. He has found and made his own the conception of the brotherhood of man as concretely and with as all-embracing results as St. Francis ever discovered our Lady Poverty, or Bunyan discovered Grace Abounding. And it is this basic strength of a man of faith that illumines his poet's vision and the workings of his mind.

IN HIS EXCELLENT preface to "Residential Quarter," the translator, Haakon Chevalier, says of Aragon's career, "From Surrealism to Socialist Realism is a long step . . . But while his work since 1930 does spring from a fundamental reorientation of his whole being, involving a literary rebirth, his new work is not wholly a denial of his early work. His very first writings are concerned with the problem of reality."

It is this concern with reality that should reassure the comfortable scepticism that makes most of us view converts and their works with suspicion. The proud and perhaps presumptuous title that Aragon has elected for his whole work, the Real World, suggests that he will not be guilty of the vulgarization of his art to poster-propaganda shadings where industrialists are all wicked and workers virtuaus. His thesis is too strong to need such weak supports. He knows that he can give all possible credit to the other side and his own stand will only be the stronger. At the same time he has too much enlightened hardness to be sentimental over this or that person merely because they are "of god will."

As nearly as a man can, with the light and shade and emphasis provided by his faith, he paints what is. He has brought to his work the discipline of training in an art highly divorced from flesh and blood. That training has taught him to leave out inessentials, to produce moments of piercing poetry—moments only where a more self-indulgent artist would please himself with pages—moments of extreme horror which also pass. And at times he is eloquent with a richness and fervor that have been lacking in French literature since the prewar Proust noted his exaltations on such different themes.

ARAGON HAS idiosyncracies and mannerisms that are often annoying. He commands a kind of Gothic horror that is often hard to stomach. "The Bells of Basel" was by no means wholly satisfactory and "Residential Quarter," though it continues the improvement one felt developing in the earlier novel, has spots that need loosening, has an occasional dryness of tone. But before the complex mass of the whole and the true spirit that informs it, these matters seem of not very great importance. "Liking" for this or that detail is unimportant when, to the construction of a real world, a real, a living man brings his force.

"RESIDENTIAL QUARTER" by Louis Aragon; translated by Haakon M. Chevalier (Harcourt, Brace, $2.50.)

Diagnosis And Prognosis

"SEEDS OF DESTRUCTION," by John Blair. (Covici-Friede, $3.)

THIS IS a timely book that should be read by lawmakers and public servants, by professors and students, by preachers and housewives, but might well be left alone by captains of industry and financiers.

In clear simple style the author traces the basic technological and economic causes of our distressed economic system. He shows that our possibilities of fuller life are thwarted by the inability of the system to make use of them. He proves that the profit system can no longer be profitable.

If our economic ups and downs are to be compared with a roller-coaster, now reaching dizzy heights and then sliding in breath-taking fashion to the lower depths—we shan't forget that there is a chain and a motor under the structure that first hoists the pleasure car to the top. The seeds of destruction have germinated; weeds have grown and entangled the prime mover.

Anatomy Of A Hotel

"LIFE CLASS," by Ludwig Momelmans. (Viking Press, $2.50.)

BEHIND THE SCENES in a swank hotel is ten times as interesting and very nearly as luxurious as out in front, according to Mr. Bremelmans. And who would know better than he who was everything from a grape-swiping busboy to assistant banquet manager in New York's finest. His style of earnest, innocent seriousness is as well adapted to this subject as to anything he has written, for it enables him to be ironic, really serious or just plain funny in a way that keeps the reader on his toes to discover which. Anyone who has ever been terrified by a fishy-eyed headwaiter or wondered what a waiter thought of his patrons will find the book fascinating. The whole hierarchy of the smart hotel is explained with all its privileges, jealousies and conflicts, which included even a small-scale world war.

"Life Class" has been called one of the funniest of the season, which is true enough, but in addition, the subject is one which is in itself wholly and delightfully appealing.

ROSS O'DONOGHUE.

International Labor Index

"YEARBOOK OF LABOR STATISTICS." (International Labor Office, Geneva, $1.50.)

THE NEW ISSUE contains, as usual, the most complete statistics of all countries on employment and unemployment, hours of work, wages, cost of living and retail prices, workers' family budgets, migration and industrial disputes. Several new series have been added, especially on national indexes of employment, wages in coal mining and agriculture.

Notes help the reader to compare the figures given for different countries. Statistical data for the United States are included in almost all the tables; in many cases not only the data of the Bureau of Labor Statistics but also those of the National Industrial Conference Board are given.

Fox Chasers

"FOXHUNTING IS DIFFERENT," by Samuel J. Henry, 950 copies. Illustrated by Paul Brown. (Derrydale Press, $7.50.)

Mr. Henry sets out to tell why it is that men, in pink coats and otherwise, bruise, bump and variously harass themselves in trying to catch a fox. He knows hunters and their natures and habits pretty thoroughly and he winds up with sundry conclusions, some of them quite interesting.

There are profiles of various fox hunting types and chapters devoted to hunting experiences. There is no finish in either the dialogue or the characterization. Some of the conclusions seem to leap too quickly out of enthusiasms. But the book is loaded with hunting wisdom, and to fox hunters that should be enough.

Anatomist Of The Common Law

The Little Known Man Behind The Well Known Books

By Huntington Cairns.

BLACKSTONE MEANS to most of us four volumes on the English common law. Mr. Lockmiller concludes that it is strange that we know practically nothing of the man who wrote them. These four volumes are among the best-known books in the English-speaking world; they have influenced American life, institutions and phraseology more, Mr. Lockmiller thinks, than almost any other work. Blackstone, however, is not a personality to us but a book. It is this anomalous situation that Mr. Lockmiller proposes to correct.

William Blackstone lived in the eighteenth century, he was unusually versatile, he suffered from gout, and he did not like physical exercise. Although he was born in Cheapside, London, he died knighted and mourned by his king. He was born poor, and by the time he was 12 years old he was also an orphan, but a benevolent uncle sent him to the Charterhouse School and paid his fees. Mr. Lockmiller reprints an old picture of the Charterhouse and briefly gives its history with a list of some of the distinguished men who learned their Latin and Greek in its halls.

Blackstone went on to Oxford, where he received the degree of bachelor of civil law. He then came to "that labyrinth of ancient buildings known as the Temple" to continue his study of the common law. Mr. Lockmiller gives also a brief history of the three English law societies, an account of the eighteenth century life that went on within their walls and a few words about their architecture—the Middle Temple Hall Mr. Lockmiller considers the best example of Tudor domestic architecture in all England. Blackstone found there no regular lectures, no readable texts and a system which required the eating of 60 dinners at stated intervals in the presence of the benchers and the paying of fees to entitle the student to be called to the bar.

SIR WILLIAM BLACKSTONE

PERHAPS THE FACT that will first attract our sympathy to the man Blackstone was his early failure to secure clients. This failure caused him to retire to Oxford where he delivered his famous lectures. For the first time in history the common law of England was recognized by a leading university and placed on a basis with the civil law of Rome which had been taught in that institution for centuries. This professorship was the forerunner of college legal education in America, and it revived the teaching of common law in England. As the lectures became famous, pirated copies began to appear. Blackstone was forced to publish them himself in order to insure an accurate edition.

Mr. Lockmiller stresses the influence of Blackstone on the American colonies. In immitation of the chair of common law founded for Blackstone at Oxford by Mr. Viner's will there was another founded at William and Mary at Williamsburg, Va. It can safely be assumed, Mr. Lockmiller adds, that practically all lawyers in the United States prior to 1900, at one time or another, read all or parts of the "Commentaries." Copies of this work were the prize possession of the Founding Fathers, who wrote into our Constitution not only Blackstone's ideas but his phraseology. Mr. Lockmiller feels that one of the strongest ties between Britain and the United States today is the legal system which we have in common.

But Mr. Lockmiller is not all praise. Blackstone sat in Parliament from 1761 until he was appointed judge on the Court of Common Please in 1770; as a legislator he was conservative and supported the Crown. In Mr. Lockmiller's eyes conservatism is not in the best of taste; he even goes so far as to tell us how Blackstone should have acted and what bills he should have supported. In the "Commentaries" Blackstone is also conservative, but about that Mr. Lockmiller is more tolerant: he argues that Blackstone was stating what the law was; that in a statement of the law he was limited by his material.

HOWEVER, JEREMY BENTHAM was not so lenient; he was the bitterest and most damaging critic of the "Commentaries." He was particularly annoyed by Blackstone's statement of the doctrine of sovereignty. The blasts that came from him and his pupil, John Austin, resulted in bringing to Blackstone's defense the outstanding figures of the day and of later times. Gibbon, Burke, Pollock and Dicey came forward to acclaim the "Commentaries," the perspicuity of its style, the conciseness of its delineation, its fascination as a literary classic, its success in presenting for the first time the whole field of English law. And Mr. Holdsworth, who today fills the chair created for Blackstone, has written that Blackstone was a literary artist who laid the foundation of the present English legal system.

When Blackstone found himself famous he left Oxford and returned to private practice. Clients were then plentiful: he was able to marry, buy an estate—Priory Manor in Wallingford—raise a large family and grow very fat. He died at 57 of dropsy.

Blackstone, It Seems, Was A Many-Sided Genius

THE VERSATILITY of Blackstone apparently was the result of his thoroughness. His mastery of mathematics led him to become interested in architecture. This hobby he was able to gratify by directing the completion of the library of All Souls College. His study of Greek and Roman poetry caused him to want to compose verses, too; a few of his poems are included by Mr. Lockmiller in the appendix to his book. Shakespeare soon became his favorite poet; this enthusiasm led him to compile the notes which Edmund Malone, the great Shakespearean scholar, included in his edition of "Shakespeare's Plays." Malone described Blackstone as "one of the most eminent literary characters that the present age has produced."

When the job of rejuvenating the Oxford press fell upon Blackstone's shoulders he did not hesitate to equip himself by mastering all there was to be known about printing. It was also Blackstone's thoroughness as judge that directed his attention to the need of prison reform; in fact, it is Blackstone as well as Bentham who should be credited with the nineteenth century prison reforms that came after their deaths.

MR. LOCKMILLER'S book is not long, and it is not technical, but the known details of Blackstone's life are so meager that he has resorted to a rich flavoring of the eighteenth century and has also drawn heavily on those "Commentaries" from which he hoped to free Blackstone that he might stand as a personality. The appendices consume almost half the space of the book; they include the poems cited above, a lecture Blackstone gave on the study of law, the argument he presented in his most famous case, Perrin vs. Blake, an outline of the "Commentaries," the address by Mr. Wickersham at the presentation of a statue of Blackstone by the American Bar Association to the British bar and an extensive bibliography.

Amateur Economics

By John M. Blair.

ECONOMICS as a science possesses many peculiar characteristics. One is that it is perhaps the only domain of thought about which it is possible to write and publish a book without undergoing the odious task of studying the subject.

The result of this has been that books and books on economics have rolled off the presses, especially in recent years. The books by scholars representing years of creative effort have been obscured by the very flood of books written by cranks, romanticists, dogmatists and outright screwballs. One of the principal groups to the subject, but seldom to the science, of economics, consists of businessmen. Through the mystical mental peregrinations of publishers, the situation has now reached the point where a businessman who becomes afflicted with something vaguely described as "a social viewpoint," is automatically transformed into an "authoritative economist."

This reviewer has no particular grievance against businessmen, but he does possess a very real grievance against anyone who writes and publishes a book on economics without being acquainted with at least some part of the vast amount of scholarly research and writings which comprise the foundation of the science.

In "Where Does America Go From Here?" Mr. Baggs discusses some trends in our economy which should be self-evident to anyone who has gone through a high school course in civics or American history. His manner of presentation, which consists of short, dogmatic paragraphs—described by the publisher as "quick, bold strokes"—does not make for interesting reading. And finally, he presents practically no factual material at all to support his conclusions. In fact, the one virtue of the book is its fortunate brevity.

One of the better works from the minds of businessmen is "Toward Full Employment," by Messrs. Dennison, Filene, Flanders and Leeds. These men have delved somewhat extensively into the subject of taxation and its place in the economic system. Particularly have they examined the income tax. Surprisingly enough, for businessmen, they have come out in favor of it. The precise relationship, though, between a technique utilized in raising part of the funds required for public expenditures and the title of the book, "Toward Full Employment," remains a little vague.

The third book, "Our Promised Land," is not by a businessman, and is a very good piece of work. The title refers not to some nebulous Valhalla, to be attained through the enactment of some specific nostrom, but to the potentialities which exist in that far-off area known vaguely to the average citizen as the "great Northwest." The book is a sociological economic portrayal of what Mr. Neuberger calls our "last frontier."

In vivid, almost journalistic style, he tells the story of the Northwest, he describes the great Grand Coulee Dam—the "biggest thing on earth"—and what its electricity and irrigation will mean to the people of that area and to the destitute drought sufferers; he writes of the intense labor warfare between Beck and Bridges; he recounts and analyzes the cock-eyed politics of the State of Washington; the politics, the class alignments, the economic patterns and, most important, the attitudes, beliefs and ideals of the people inhabiting this vast area, all come into his purview. The book is stimulating and well written. On reading it, though, certain questions do come to mind. For example, where are the markets to be found for the large amounts of new and additional agricultural produce to be raised on this "last frontier" after it is developed!

"OUR PROMISED LAND," by Richard L. Neuberger. (Macmillan, $3.)

The Minor Muse

"TO GROW NEW BEAUTY," by Mavor Moore: includes a sonnet sequence called "Mushiknava" (The Musk-Deer), a legend of India.

"THIS LIVING URGE," by Lorraine Patterson, of Washington, D. C.: adept love sonnets and lyrics in the modern mode.

"SMOKE AROUND THE SUN," by Gladys Brown Denison: poignant and promising are these poems by a Wisconsin social worker. They are genuine because she feels deeply.

"QUEST OF THE SINGING TREE," by Robert F. Hein, of Baltimore: a young poet's first book of verse. Philosophic and religious themes competently handled. Odes to Poe, Chaucer, Shakespeare and Stravinsky.

"JULIE'S SUCH A PRETTY LADY," by Eleanor Herrick: verse with more enthusiasm than poetic merit.

"COLLECTED POEMS," by Joseph S. Cotter, sr.: mostly Negro themes, by one who has been a teacher and principal in the Louisville public schools for 50 years.

"THE CREOLE OF THE MISSION," by Julius M. Richardson:: a long narrative symbolic poem in heroic couplets, and a few others.

Made In England

By Evelyn Page

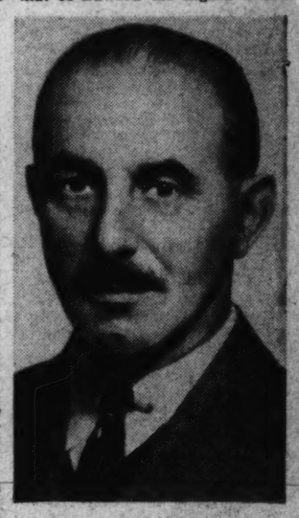
ONLY AN ENGLISHMAN could have written Gilbert Frankau's "Royal Regiment." That only an Englishman could read it with sympathy and understanding I do not dare to say, for many Americans seem to have applauded his earlier novels. But certainly the average reader-citizen of these United States will have to adjust his mental and moral values and put control on his sense of humor before he can get rapt away by the complications of the story.

At its opening, Maj. Thomas ("Rusty" to his friends) Rockingham, along with the other officers of the mess of the Royal Artillery, suffers a severe shock when Col. Sir Guy Wethered, D. S. O., M. C., says, "Gentlemen, I give you the health of our new King, Edward the Eighth." He should according to sacred tradition, have said "Gentlemen, the K[illegible]." His unusual toast shows "Rusty" Rockingham and the rest of the B[illegible] army what an extraordinary fellow Sir Guy is. They already know [illegible] this reinforces their opinion of him) that Sir Guy after a short [illegible] dramatic courtship has married an American, a woman 20 years yo[illegible]r than he, and beautiful.

When Rockingham meets Camilla Wethered, he finds her charm[illegible]. Each has an attraction for the other, and it occurs to Sir Guy, who is somewhat cruelly amused, that they may fall in love. Not that he intends to interfere with the process. He intends to watch it. Whatever happens, he knows that he will not allow himself to be robbed of his Camilla. Besides, Rockingham is a "pukka Sahib.' He is too much the man of discipline, the man of honor, the man of integrity, to lust after another's wife.

AFTER A STIMULATING week-end at the Wethereds', Rockingham returns to his quarters to be confronted with the emotional difficulties of Lance-Sergeant Godden who has involved himself with another sergeant's wife, and who is not allowed to re-engage (re-enlist) until he has given up his illicit amour. To Rockingham there are no two sides to the question. Godden must behave as decency and the law demand, whatever his personal suffering.

Much later, when Rockingham realizes that he himself has fallen in love with Camilla Wethered, he realizes what it is that he has urged the submissive Lance-Sergeant to do. In the meantime, there are rumors of another extra-conventional romance—that of Edward the Eighth and a certain lady, much divorced. In each case, whatever the circumstances and whatever the conclusion, the struggle is between love and duty, between a man's emotions and his code.



GILBERT FRANKAU.

This reflection of "Rusty" Rockingham's dilemma in both a higher and a lower social sphere might easily make the framework of a smart, readable novel, but the possibilities of "Royal Regiment" are stultified by the rigidity and its dullness. The story is clogged with army shop talk, obscured with technical slang, slowed to the point of stopping with side issues. Its morality is, to say the least, uncertain, for Rockingham is preserved from a break with his code (the code itself is not entirely straightforward) not by any will of his own but by a set of entirely fortuitous occurrences.

If you are willing to swallow all this, you will find scenes and characters in the book that are entertaining. If you want to enjoy it as a whole you must, as I said to begin with, subdue your wits to the dicta of His Majesty's services. You can check on yourself by deciding whether the wording of Sir Guy's toast is of importance to you. If any but the phrase, "Gentlemen, the King," shocks you, then "Royal Regiment" is your stuff.

"ROYAL REGIMENT," by Gilbert Frankau. (Dutton, $2.50.)

FREE... TO NEW MEMBERS

Joseph in Egypt, by Thomas Mann

—or any of the other Book-Dividends listed in coupon

If you decide to join the Book-of-the-Month Club now, we will give you free, as a new member, a novel which has been acclaimed as "perhaps the greatest creative work of the twentieth century"—JOSEPH IN EGYPT, by Thomas Mann (two volumes, boxed, retail price $5.00). This was one of the recent book-dividends of the Club. Or, if you prefer, you may choose one of the other recent book-dividends listed in the coupon.

Why miss in 1939—as you did in 1938—so many new books you would deeply enjoy?

THE self-examination provided at the left will show the degree to which you may have allowed procrastination to keep you from reading new books which you want very much to read. Over 200,000 families—persons like yourself—have found a subscription to the Book-of-the-Month Club a really effectual means of solving this problem.

You are not obliged, as a member of the Club, to take the book-of-the-month its judges choose. Nor are you obliged to buy one book every month from the Club.

Publishers submit all their important books to us. These go through the most careful reading routine now in existence. At the end of this sifting process, our five judges choose one book as the book-of-the-month.

You receive a carefully written report about this book in advance of its publication. If you decide from this report that it is a book you really want, you let it come to you. If not, you merely sign and mail a slip, saying, "Don't want it."

You Still Browse In Bookstores

Scores of other recommendations are made to help you choose among all new books with discrimination.

If you want to buy one of these from the Club, you can get it by merely asking for it. Or you can use these reports (we find that most of our members do) to guide you in buying these miscellaneous recommended books from a favored bookseller.

In other words, instead of limiting your reading, this system widens it. You can browse among the books as always, but now do it intelligently; you know what to look for.

Once and for all this system really keeps you from missing the new books you want to read. You do actually buy and read those you want, instead of confessing sadly to friends, "I never got around to reading that!"

In addition, there is a great money-saving. Time and again our judges' choices are books you ultimately find yourself buying anyway, because they are so widely talked about. (Outstanding examples of these in 1938 were THE YEARLING, WITH MALICE TOWARD SOME, THE HORSE AND BUGGY DOCTOR, and a list of others too long to include here.) For every two books-of-the-month you buy you receive, free, one of our book-dividends.

Free Books You Get

These book-dividends represent a unique system of saving through quantity production. The resulting economy is extraordinary. For every $1 you spend for a book-of-the-month you actually receive over 75¢ back in the form of free books.

Some of the actual book-dividends distributed within recent months is the best indication of what can be done by this system: they included BARTLETT'S FAMILIAR QUOTATIONS (a special $6 edition); JOSEPH IN EGYPT (2 vols., $5); the Pulitzer Prize edition of ANDREW JACKSON, by Marquis James ($5); MADAME CURIE, by Eve Curie ($3.50); THE ARTS, by Van Loon ($3.95). These books were given to members—not sold, mind you!

What's Your Obligation

You pay no yearly sum to belong to the Book-of-the-Month Club. You pay nothing, except for the books you buy.

Your only obligation as a member is to agree to buy four books-of-the-month a year from the Club. These may be either current or past selections.

BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB, Inc., 385 Madison Ave., N. Y. N21

Please enroll me as a member. It is understood that I am to receive, free, the book checked below, that I am also to receive, without expense, your monthly magazine which reports about current books, and that for every two books-of-the-month I purchase from the Club, I am to receive the current book-dividend then being distributed. Miss Davies, Daughter Of Envoy, Is Betrothed

By Hope Ridings Miller

The Post Society Editor.

AT A SMALL TEA given yesterday at Pierre's in New York City, Mrs. Knight Davies, of Washington, announced the engagement of her daughter, Emlen Knight Davies, to Robert Leon Grosjean, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Grosjean, of Brussels, Belgium.

Among the guests were the bride-elect's brother-in-law and sister, Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings, who went to New York especially to attend the event. They will return to Washington tomorrow.

Miss Davies' father, formerly United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union, is now Ambassador to Belgium, where both Mrs. Tydings and Miss Davies visited him the past summer.

MISS DAVIES was graduated from Holton-Arms School and from Vassar College in 1938. She made her debut here and was presented at the Court of St. James' in 1935. Her college course, continued after she made her bow to society, including a period of study at the University of Moscow, where she spent a winter when her father was envoy to the Soviet Union.

The prospective bridegroom is a reserve lieutenant in the Premier Regiment de Guide of the Belgian calvary. He studied at Le Rosey School in Switzerland, attended Princeton University, class of 1932, and was graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He is now in London, where he is connected with the London offices of General Foods.

MR. GROSJEAN'S father is prominent in banking circles in Europe and his mother, an American, formerly lived in Evansville, Ind. He and his parents have spent much time in this country and are widely known in New York.

The courtship, which began a couple of years ago, was culminated the past summer when Miss Davies was abroad. She went over in July with Mrs. Mead

If you don't know your lines for the Junior League Follies scheduled to hold its opening night February 3 at the Belasco Theater, you can do all your explaining to Mrs. Donald McKnew and Mrs. Crosby Boyd, whose pictures appear directly above. They're in charge of making rehearsals go as smoothly as possible and here they are right on the job. In the circle are Mrs. Atherton Macondray, head of publicity for the show, and Harlan Dixon, who has to see that the skits are laugh-ful and fool-proof. On the right is Mrs. Philip Young, daughter-in-law of Owen D. Young. Mrs. Young will go bouffant in the Waltz Number. With her in this picture is her cocker spaniel, Sir Tristram

BREATHES THERE A MAN with soul so dead who could possibly forget who glorified the American girl? Lest there be one Washingtonian with so brief a memory, we recall to you the great Zeigfeld and, in case you haven't heard, we hasten to inform you that the Junior League Follies will be closely patterned after the glorious Zeigfeld Follies. Harlan Dixon, co-director with Ray Walsh, among other claims to Broadway fame, staged all the dance numbers for the Zeigfeld show that starred Marilyn Miller and the Astaires. Ray Walsh has been in scores of New York hits and was dance director for Paramount shorts. As a matter of fact, everything in the J. L. Follies except the cast will be professional.

Latest additions to the cast are Adelaide Morgan, who has a lovely voice and has studied singing for several years; Mrs. E. Robert Kinnebrew, colutura soprano who at one time toured the country with Martinelli; Phil Gore and A. Z. Wood, who will do a bit of twirling and singing, and Julian Greene, Dick Walsh and John Slidell, who will shine in a comedy skit. Mail orders for tickets are now being received and the box-office will be open January 30.

CLIMAXING A WEEK of marvelous parties, many in honor of those two most scintillating personalities, Noel Coward and Beatrice Lillie, was the dinner and after-theater supper given last night at the Tommy Thomases. Visiting Helen Thomas over the week-end are Mrs. Armstrong Gwynn and Mrs. Dwight Wiman, from New York . . . From the gourmet's viewpoint, the dinner deserving honorable mention this week was the small one given the other night by Floyd Waggaman and his son, Bob. The delicacies that drew the most groans from guests who were repeatedly faced with new and irresistible courses, were terrapin cooked to a king's taste and breast of guinea hen. Partaking

The Minister of the Netherlands and Mme. Loudon were honor guests last evening at a dinner given by the Naval Attache of the Netherlands Legation and Mme. Meijer Ranneft.

Guests were Rear Admiral George T. Pettengill and Mrs. Pettengill, Rear Admiral Ralston S. Holmes and Mrs. Holmes, and the Naval Attache of the British Embassy, Capt. St. J. Curzon-Howe, and Mrs. Curzon-Howe.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

WITH TRUE democratic enthusiasm for royalty, which in America always eclipses that shown by any other country, Washington society is already buzzing excitedly about the visit here several months hence of no less than one King, one Queen, and two Crown Princes and Princesses. As though the scheduled stay of the British monarch and his wife weren't enough excitement for one season, immediately following or preceding them to the Capital will come Crown Prince Olav and Princess Martha of Norway and Crown Prince Frederick and Princess Ingrid of Denmark.

In comparison with the hundreds of thousands of words already writtetn on the English royal family, practically nothing is known here in America about the other visitors. Most of us are aware, for example, that King George VI is very much a family man, that he founded a summer camp where rich and poor boys might mingle; that Queen Elizabeth's taste in dress runs to white fox furs and pastel colored dresses. But did you know that Crown Prince Olav is a skiing and yachting expert and that one of Crown Prince Frederick's chief interests is music, especially symphony orchestras?

NORWAY'S ROYAL PAIR will arrive April 26 on the Oslofjord, flagship of the Norwegian line. Like the Danish Crown Prince and his wife, who land in New York May 7, the couple will be guests of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt at Hyde Park for several days. They will then go to New York, where May 1 the prince will open the Norwegian Pavilion at the World's Fair. Crown Prince Frederick will officiate in a similar capacity for Denmark at the Fair grounds.

Tall, blonde and strongly built, Norway's prince looks like the outdoors man which he is. Since his early youth he has been an intrepid skier and has taken part in many ski events, among them the famous Holmenkillen jumping competition. With the Crown Prince at the helm, his famous six-meter yachts have won a great number of national and international races.

The prince and his bride, who is a niece of King Gustaf of Sweden, live a healthy, simple life at their estate, Skaugum, in the hills outside Oslo, overlooking the fjord. They participate in all

Schuyler W. Livingston Weds Miss McCandlish

Granduncle Gives Bride in Marriage; Reception Follows Fairfax Ceremony; Couple Will Live in Alexandria

WEARING A VEIL OF Italian lace that her family has owned since 1853, Miss Mary Walton McCandlish, daughter of Mrs. Fairfax Sheild McCandlish, of Fairfax, Va., and the late Mr. McCandlish, was married at 8 o'clock last evening to Schuyler William Livingston, of Washington, son of Mr. and Mrs. Schuyler W. Livingston, of Washington, Iowa.

The ceremony took place in the Truro Episcopal Church in Fairfax, which was decorated with white lilies and white candles. The Rev. Herbert A. Donovan officiated and the bride was given in marriage by her granduncle, R. Walton Moore, counselor of the State Department. Her gown of white satin was made on princess lines and she carried white orchids and lilies of the valley.

MISS NANCY MONTAGUE MCCANDLISH, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, wearing a rose taffeta frock with a hoop skirt and carrying an old-fashioned bouquet of sweetheart roses and forget-me-nots. The bridesmaids, the Misses Eleanor Rust, of Fairfax; Rosalie Nelson, of Winchester, and Elizabeth Ogilby, of Chevy Chase, wore similar dresses in blue and carried bouquets like that of the maid of honor.

Brunson MacChesney, of Washington, was best man, and the ushers were F. Sheild McCandlish, of Fairfax, brother of the bride; William D. Evans, of Richmond, her cousin, and Joseph Greenwood, Allan Hart, William T. Lesh, Leonard Lyons and Gerard Reilly, of Washington.

A RECEPTION at the home of Mr. Moore followed the ceremony. Among the guests were William C. Bullitt, Ambassador to France; Mr. and Mrs. Schuyler W. Livingston, of Washington, Iowa, parents of the bridegroom; Representative and Mrs. H. J. Voorhis, of California; his sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. David Livingston, of Chicago, his brother and sister-in-law; another brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Elliot Moses, of New York; Mrs. William A. Jones, of Warsaw, Va.; Miss Nannie McCandlish, of Saluda, Va.; former Governor and Mrs. Westmoreland Davis, of Leesburg, Va.; Thomas D. Lewis, of Amherst, Va., and Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Kyle, of New York.

After a wedding trip the couple will live at Seminary Hill, Alexandria. The bride is a graduate of National Cathedral School and Sweet Briar College. Mr. Livingston attended Harvard College and Harvard Law School and is now on the legal staff of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Moore and her daughter, the former Emily Maitland Moore, who was marreid to Elbridge Durbow in London. After serving as maid of honor at the wedding, Miss Davies went on to Brussels to visit her father and his wife.

Returning to this country early December, Miss Davies has been with her mother in New York for the past few weeks. Mrs. Davies left here in October after having leased her house on Massachusetts avenue to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Himes for the winter. At that time, she told friends here that her plans were a bit indefinite; that she and Emlen probably would spend some of their time the next few months traveling, and that they might be off to South America for a visit.

IN NEW YORK she joined her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Aldace Walker, the latter of whom formerly was Miss Rahel Davies; and when Miss Emlen Davies returned, she and her mother took an apartment in New York, where they probably will spend the remainder of the winter. While no definite date is being announced for the wedding, chances are it will take place in the spring.

Slender, blonde and pretty, Miss Davies was a popular member of the younger set here during her Holton-Arms and debutante days. But even in the midst of the partying whirl she took time out for some serious pursuits and tried her hand at writing with some success. Her verse has appeared in a nationally known magazine.

Diplomatic Circles:

Colombia Envoy Saw No Nazi Tricks at Lima

Dr. Lopez, Arriving Here, Surprised at Report; Enjoyed Social Acitvities

By Nancy Archibald.

THE COLOMBIAN AMBASSADOR, Miguel Lopez Pumarejo, had barely alighted from his plane returning from the Lima Peace Conference, when he was shown an article describing the Nazi influence as having dominated the conference. The Ambassador said it was the first he had heard of such activities, and added that he saw no preponderance of Nazi flags or any dubious retainers who might have been delivering pro-Hitler messages.

Dr. Lopez, who, incidentally, is considered a keen and clever diplomat, and Mme. Lopez, enjoyed the social whirl during their visit to Lima and remember especially a colorful ball at the Chilean Embassy, where guests were resplendent in brilliant uniforms and stately tangos and old world waltzes were the rule of the evening. There were many receptions at the Embassies and Legations, and the banquet given by the President of Peru, Gene. Oscar Benevides, on the night before their departure, in the sumptuous presidential palace, was a Lucullan feast.

Next fall there probably will be great social activity at the Colombian Embassy here, for Dona de Lopez's two daughters, Lucia and Rosario, will then have reached debutante age.

CAPITAN JORGE GODOY, newly arrived Argentine Naval Attache, has been all over the world and has worked with several naval commissions, most recently at Rome and London, but Washington is his first diplomatic post. He says he feels at home, though, for he is working with yet another naval commission here to study ship-building in the United States. Mme. Godoy, who is a stunning woman with waving black hair and flashing eyes, has lost no time about sight-seeing and, armed with maps, she and her husband have already explored much of Washington.

Attention bridge players: Mme. Godoy is an enthusiast about the game and plays a keen hand. Her husband, too, enjoys it, and often occupies his spare time with autobridge, the one-man game. They both like chess, and Mme. Godoy took in all the honors on the boat coming over.

"NEVER AGAIN," decided Robert Coe, of the State Department, and the Zuberbuhlers, of the Argentine Embassy, who attended the National Theater last week, will prove the most danced-to melody of the in-between season . . . And "never again," cried the Pastoriza family, of the Dominican Legation, would they announce a forthcoming departure in advance. Minister Urena will not exchange posts with Minister Pastoriza and they will not go to London, after all.

A cocktail party will be given in honor of Tiger Hunter Sasha Siemel by the Latvian Minister and Mme. Bilmanis this afternoon.

Due as Second Secretary at the Brazilian Embassy is Fernando Saboia de Madeiras, and the Capital will welcome back Decio de Moura, who is listed as First Secretary to replace A. Teixeira Soares, who leaves for the Foreign Office . . . Coming to the Swedish Legation as Attache is Gosta af Petersens. He is not new to the United States, having been posted in Chicago and Minneapolis. And just settled at 2320 Thirty-fourth place are the new Rumanian Military attache and Mme. Dimitru Petrescu

Social Whirl Begun By Senate Families

Peppers and Wileys Journey Northward for Week-End; Mrs. Millard E. Tydings Arranges Buffet Supper for January 22

By Elizabeth Ford.

WITH THE FIRST gavel heard this year, the social scene has taken a quick spin down the Avenue and landed at the Capitol. Wives of Senators and Representatives are busy drawing up "party" lines of their own. They do say as how even Columbia (who poses on the dome) has asked the Committee on Appropriations for a new bronze dress for the season. She claims the old one is too outmoded for Mrs. X's tea.

While some of the ladies of the House (and Senate) still are hanging drapes and getting new apartments in running order, a few have passed the resettlement stage and are off this week-end on out-of-town calls.

Among them are Senator and Mrs. Claude Pepper who have journied to Long Island—to be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Grover Whalen. Since Mr. Whalen has been thumping the tom-toms for the World's Fair, the Peppers will be personally conducted over the terrain and see it all firsthand. Mr. and Mrs. Whalen will fete them at a dinner, and then, come tomorrow, Senator and Mrs. Pepper will be back along the Potomac.

STILL OTHERS WHO ARE out-of-towning are Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings.

Mrs. Tydings, by the way, is planning a buffet supper for the evening of Sunday, January 22. The serious purpose of the spread is to honor two of Senator Tydings' fellow-Marylanders, and of course, their wives. They are newly elected Representative William Byron and Mrs. Byron and newly re-elected Representative William P. Cole. Exercising your memory: Mrs. Byron is the daughter of Mrs. Goodloe Edgar.

ANOTHER NEW NAMEPLATE in the Senate Office Building these days belongs to Senator Alexander Wiley, of Wisconsin. He and Mrs. Wiley are making their Washington stay at the Westchester. When they're not treading the halls of Congress, however, Chippewa Falls is their home town.

With them is their daughter, Miss Winifred Jean Wiley. Miss Wiley is a graduate of Lawrence College, and before coming to the Capital this session to join her father's force, she taught English. Mrs. Wiley, herself, used to be a school teacher. Like the Peppers, the Wileys also are New York bound this week-end.

SOMETIME DURING each season, at least 80 per cent of the folk out in Idaho come to Washington to visit Mrs. William E. Borah, and they always have a tip-top time.

Mrs. Borah already has been up to her famous hospitality and has had as her guest during the week, Miss Josephine Rothchild, of Boise. After a whirl in Manhattan, Miss Rothchild will be off for a "ski" at Sun Valley. She recently returned to the United States after a trip around the world.

HER HUSBAND is a Representative from California, but she grew up in Montclair, N. J.—studied at Miss Choate's School in Boston—and after that dashed through two years at Vassar. Then she went West—to the University of Arizona. She's Mrs. Carl Hinshaw and has two little boys, John Veeder and William Ripley.

The Hinshaws, who temporarily made their headquarters at the Mayflower, have gotten themselves a house on Thirty-fifth street, where they are digging in for the winter.

SOMEONE who didn't know Representative Lindley Beckworth, of Texas, was a bachelor, inquired about his marital state. "Oh, no," said Mr. Beckworth who is 24 years old and a credit to any collar ad, "I'm not married. You see," he added after an apologetic pause, "I'm old and sort of hopeless."

Two Marriages Set Saturday

Miss Betsy Mitchell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Mitchell, of Silver Spring, Md., has selected Saturday as the date of her wedding to Leon Soudant, of Harworth, N. J. The ceremony which will take place at 11 a. m. and will be performed by the Rev. Lawrence J. Sheahan. Miss Martha Mitchell, sister of the bride-elect, will be the maid of honor, while John Gruete, of New York City, will serve as best man. Miss Betsy Mitchell recently was entertained at a lingerie shower given by Miss Bernardine Cullen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John E. Cullen.

Another bride-to-be from Silver Spring who has selected Saturday as her wedding date is Miss Angela Marie Brew, who will be married to Borden Philip Shrieves, of Washington. Miss Brew is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Brew. The ceremony will take place at the home of the bride-elect's parents on Montgomery avenue. Mrs. Joseph M. Buckley will be her sister's matron of honor and the best man will be Joseph Brim, of Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Piepgrass and their son, Stanley, have sailed for England. After spending a short time in London they plan to go to Nigeria, Africa, where they will engage in missionary work.

Mrs. Frank L. Hewitt will be hostess at bridge tomorrow evening at her home on the Colesville road.

Mrs. Harry McComas and Mrs. John B. Revie entertained at luncheon and bridge Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Revie.

Henry E. Worcester, jr., was given a bachelor dinner Monday at the Congressional Country Club by a group of 40 of his close friends. Mr. Worcester's marriage to Miss Dorothy Scott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Scott, of North Hills, took place Thursday evening.

Thomas Shaw is spending a month in Tampa, Fla.

Dr. Reed, Wife Will Entertain For L. W. Petrees

of the excellencies of Mr. Waggaman's kitchen, who is both a connoisseur of wine and food, were Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Max Kauffmann, Rudolph and Mary Kauffmann, Andy and Sittie Parker and Bill Brawner . . . Nancy Ordway entertained at a small dinner Thursday evening in honor of Katherine Blair, who is visiting her cousin, Bill Bolles. It was a "game" party from beginning to end, with Nancy Woodward, Erland Kleen, Swedish Attache; Forrester Davison, Lisette Riggs, Larry Knapp, Glen Leet and Jim Boswell participating, and Will Ryan, who is a game fan acting as master of ceremonies for the mystery game, razzle-dazzle, and "the game."

STILL MORE PARTIES, counting from yesterday on: Mr. and Mrs. Selden Chapin entertained yesterday afternoon, and Mr. and Mrs. David Hendricks were hosts at dinner last night . . . Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnstock will entertain at dinner on Wednesday the 18th . . . Mr. and Mrs. Leander McCormick-Goodhart will give an at-home Thursday afternoon to meet Helen Hayes, star of this week's show at the National . . . And then a veritable epidemic of birthday parties: the Polish Ambassador will give a party on the 22nd, celebrating his birthday, and the same evening Mrs. Emil Hurja will give a birthday party for her husband. And Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Prochnik will celebrate the former Austrian Minister's birthday the evening before on Saturday the 21st. This affair, by the way, was supposed to have been a surprise, but when Gretchen invited the Simses she forgot to tell Mitzi the date. Consequently Mitzi and Harold arrived last Saturday night ladened with presents to be greeted by a completely baffled Mr. Prochnik . . . The Harold Simses will give a dinner for Mr. and Mrs. William Littauer on the 25th.

HERE AND THERE: The Minister of Norway and Mme. Morgenstierne have just acquired a small and cozy cottage-bungalow in Fairfax County, where they plan to spend every week-end, take long walks in the country and sit around a large, comfortable fireplace . . . Edythe Ann Corbin left last week for New York, but Dolly has postponed her departure until February 1 . . . Sheldon Thomas is week-ending in New York . . . Peter McHarg's sister, Jane McHarg Byington, who with her husband, Homer Byington, is stationed in Naples, has just moved into a beautiful new villa called "Castle in the Sun" . . . Eldridge Durbrow, who will see his wife, the former Emily Moore, receive her A. B. degree from Vassar in February, said he literally rowed all the way across the ocean on his recent trip from Rome—in the steamer's gymnasium.

kinds of events in the Norwegian capital, and are often seen at theaters and concerts. They have three young children—two daughters and a son, Prince Harald, 1-year-old successor to the throne and the first prince born in Norway since 1370.

A FULL-FLEDGED colonel in the Norwegian Army, the Crown prince went to school and college in Norway and graduated from the Oslo Military Academy. He also studied for two years at Balliol College at Oxford—appropriately enough, as through his mother, the late Queen Maud, he is the first cousin of King George, and he was born at Sandringham. Queen Maud was a sister of the late King George V.

CROWN PRINCE FREDERICK, on the other hand, is a navy man. Like all the Danish princes, he received his entire education in Denmark, and like his father before him was graduated from the University of Copenhagen. In his late thirties, he is an excellent shot and loves tennis. The Princess is the daughter by his first wife of Crown Prince Gustav Adolf, of Sweden, who visited Washington last summer with the Princess and a son, Prince Bertil. Ingrid's mother was a daughter of the Duke of Connaught.

BOTH the Danish and the Norwegian princesses are tall, handsome and popular with their subjects. Both share an interest in the arts and crafts of their countries. A sewing school in Oslo bears Princess Martha's name, and Princess Ingrid is particularly active in aiding the lace making for which Denmark is famous. She is also interested in child welfare, old age pensions and other forms of social work.

As with the King and Queen of Great Britain, this will be the first time that either of the royal couples have ever visited America.

Some 50 young children, in fancy dress, gathered at the South African Legation yesterday afternoon for a party given by Mrs. Ralph William Close in honor of Gilliann Naude, 4-year-old daughter of the Attache of the legation and Mrs. Willem Naude.

Little Gilliann was dressed in the costume of a voortrekker, as the pioneer settlers who opened up South Africa were called. Young Anna Siegruhn, daughter of the newly arrived Commercial Attache of the legation and Mrs. Johan Siegruhn, was also attired in this picturesque garb.

Children from the Diplomatic Corps made up most of the gathering, though young Marcus and Melissa Woodring, son and daughter of the Secretary of War and Mrs. Harry H. Woodring, were also present.

Games were played and Mickey Mouse movies were shown following tea, which consisted of sandwiches, cookies, ice cream and other delicacies beloved by children.

Mrs. Close will entertain again, this time for grown-ups, at three dinners, one on Thursday and the others January 26 and 28.

Large Reception to Open G.F.W.C. Parley Tuesday

Congressmen, U. S. Officials, Social Notables Expected at Fete Which Will Launch 4-Day Session of Nation's Club Leaders

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Club leaders from every State in the Union are arriving in Washington today and tomorrow for the midwinter meeting of the board of directors of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, Tuesday, through Friday. The meeting is the first of Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar's administration as president and will emphasize, in all departments of the organization, the theme: "Adjusting Democracy to Human Welfare."

Instead of holding the sessions at the historic headquarters of the federation, which once was the home of Gen. Nelson A. Miles, the sessions will be held at the Mayflower Hotel, beginning with a huge reception Tuesday night to which members of both houses of Congress have been bidden, each invitation carrying the card of the general federation director from his State.

National representation for the District of Columbia, child welfare and health, Federal aid for education and consumer education will be among the subjects to be discussed by the guest speakers and in the business sessions of the board. There will also be discussion of a strong American citizenship program, in line with the trend of the times. Mrs. F. H. Clausen, of Horicon, Wisc., is chairman of this department. International relations will be discussed under the leadership of Frederic Beggs, of Wyckoff, N. J., chairman.

Stand on Neutrality Taken at Convention

The general federation, at its triennial convention in Kansas City last spring, went on record in favor of legislation permitting the Government "sufficient discretion to invoke certain embargoes against treaty-breaking nations without at the same time penalizing the nation willing to abide by its treaties, and to include in such embargoes raw materials which may be used in the prosecution of war." This and other phases of international relations will be studied in a comprehensive program outlined by Mrs. Beggs for her department.

Department chairmen who will present reports in addition to Mrs. Clausen and Mrs. Beggs, are Mrs. Gustav Ketterer, of Pennsylvania, chairman of legislation; Dr. Josephine L. Pierce, of Ohio, American Home; Mrs. Wiley Morgan, of Tennessee, education; Mrs. Carl L. Schrader, Massachusetts, fine arts; Mrs. David S. Long, Missouri, Junior Club Women; Mrs. Fred R. Lufkin, Illinois, publicity, and Mrs. Bevens, of Arkansas, public welfare.

Mrs. Roosevelt To Be Speaker

Mrs. Roosevelt will be an honor guest and the principal speaker at the Wednesday evening session on the subject, "Club Women and Their Responsibility to Democracy." She will also receive the members of the board for tea at the White House that afternoon.

Wednesday morning, Dr. John M. Cassels, director of the Institute for Consumer Education at Stephens College, Columbia, Mo., will be presented by the Department of the American Home under Dr. Pierce.

Thursday morning, Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, sponsor of the Senate bill for national representation for the District, will be presented by the chairman of legislation, as speaker on the subject. Mrs. William Brown Maloney, editor of This Week, also will be on the program. Thursday evening, under the department of education, Dr. Howard A. Dawson, director of rural service for the National Education Association, will speak on "Federal Aid for Education."

Friday afternoon, Miss Dorothy Gordon, who directs children's radio programs, will be presented by Mrs. Harold Vincent Milligan, of New York City; Friday, under the department of public welfare, Dr. Thomas Parran, surgeon general of the public health service; Dr. Beatrice McConnell and Dr. Martha M. Eliot, of the Children's Bureau, will speak.

Mrs. Hazel Brown Piers, chairman of music for the D. C. Federation of Women's clubs, will have charge of the music for the Wednesday and Thursday programs, and Mrs. William Collins, chairman of music for the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase, will provide the program Friday evening. Mrs. Piers will present Ruby Evans Parrett, soprano forerly of the Chicago Opera Co., on Wednesday and Eva Noel, of Baltimore, violinist, Thursday.

Mrs. Cornelia Meigs will be the guest author and will talk about her latest child's book, "Scarlet Oak." Mrs. Meigs received the Newberry medal in 1934 for her "Invincible Louisa."

Mrs. Theodore Tiller, chairman of book reviews, announces a departure from the usual type of program with this one devoted entirely to books written for children.

Children Will Represent Characters

Mrs. Rose Robinson Cohen will present students from her "Children's Studio of Drama," to represent the main characters in each book. There will be a large book, six feet in height, placed on the stage, from which characters of fiction will step out to portray their parts.

Favorite characters from the Mother Goose nursery rhymes will be followed by living representives from "Hiawatha," "Alice in Wonderland," "Little Black Sambo," "Quality Street," "Merrylips," then "Hitty," by Rachel Field, whose latest book, "All This and Heaven Too," is a best seller. This will be followed by "Mary Poppins," "Susan Beware," and "The Far Distant Oxue," written bzy two 15-year-old girls, Katherine Hull and Pamela Whitlock.

Miss Mabel Vernon Will Also Give Impressions of Party; Art Group Meets in Decatur House

Mrs. Burton W. Musser, of Salt Lake City, delegate to the Lima conference who returned last week from Lima, will deliver an address, giving her impressions of the conference at a dinner being arranged in her honor by the International Relations Committee, Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women, Tuesday, at the club house at 7 p. m.

Miss Mabel Vernon, head of the People's Mandate, who also attended the conference, will be a guest and will speak. Miss Mary Wellborn, of the People's Mandate also will be a guest.

Mrs. Robert Olesen, president of the Washington Branch will greet the guests, and Mrs. John Donaldson, chairman of the international relations committee, will introduce the speakers.

Yesterday, in connection with the study of early Washington art, the art appreciation group of the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women, under the chairmanship of Miss Louise Newell, met in the Decatur House on Lafayette square. Thus, through the courtesy of its owner, Mrs. Truxton Beale, members of the group were permitted to study in the beautiful old mansion.

Decatur House, so named from its original owner, Stephen Decatur, was built in 1819 and is the last remaining example of a residence designed by the famous architect, Benjamin Henry Latrobe, who made original designs for the House of Representatives and the Senate Chamber, in 1811, and was also designer of St. John's Church on Sixteenth street.

Alvin T. Stauffer, historian of the National Park Service, spoke yesterday on the historical background of Decatur House and the interior, which has been preserved intact for over 120 years. The time for the meeting was placed at 3 p. m. because the house does not have modern lighting facilities.

Among those who were present yesterday were Miss L. Newell, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hogue, Dr. and Mrs. Robert Olesen, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Fowler, Mr. and Mrs. Parker D. Trask, Mr. and Mrs. H. Caemerer, Senora de Los Rios, wife of the Spanish Ambassador; Mrs. Michell Carroll and Mrs. Winters Haydock.

Robert Gordon to Address 20th Century Club on Folk Songs

The music section of the Twentieth Century Club will be addressed by Mr. Robert Winslow Gordon on "The American Folk Song" Tuesday afternoon at a meeting in the Y. W. C. A. in charge of Mrs. Geritt S. Miller, jr. Mr. Gordon has spent 30 years collecting and studying American folk music.

"To my knowledge—and I have only scratched the surface," said Mr. Gordon in an interview, "America has a heritage of folk song greater not only in its mass but in its infinite variety and its intrinsic value than that known to have been possessed by any nation. There is as much or more American folk song being created today as in any period of our history."

Folk music thrives in most cities in groups racially or otherwise separated from others. Such music is being created in East Side New York and similar sections of other cities, he says.

Mr. Gordon began his collecting of folk music with the sea chanteys on the Pacific Coast. Then he returned to the Harvard University Library for a year to continue his stury. Later he went into the field as a Sheldon Fellow of Harvard for the study of the spirituals. He spent five years in this research in North Carolina, Tennessee and the coastal region of Georgia. On his return he founded the Archives of American Folk Song at the Library of Congress, of which he was the first archivist. For five years he also was editor of the folk song department of an American magazine.

His criticism of his predecessors in the study of folk music is that they studied only manuscripts, spending useless time arguing how the songs came into being 100 or 200 years before. The only way to learn how they actually grew is to study those of our own day, he says.

The earliest sea chanteys he studied were those of 1870. A song is never sung twice alike at any given time or place by any two persons, he says, and it is impossible to understand any one type without understanding the others. It is also necessary to understand the folk before it is possible to understand their songs. The scholar in the library cannot find this in books. Another thing, the music is of equal importance with the song he points out.

Mr. Gordon received his training under Prof. George Lyman Kittredge, of Harvard, and taught there, at Radcliffe, the University of California and George Washington University, as well as carrying on his research and writing newspaper and magazine articles on the subject.

His talk Tuesday will be one of the few he has made in Washington.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

JANUARY 24 has been set as the "deadline" for reservations for the luncheon of the Washington Chapter, National Council of Jewish Women to be given at the Mayflower, January 31. On that day the hostesses will draw for tables.

The slogan which has been adopted for the luncheon is "Every hostess a happy one, every member, an honored guest." The object of the affair is to bring together all who wish to enroll themselves as contributors to the council.

Pipers' Guild To Be Formed In Washington

A Pipers' Guild, like those which for many years have existed in England, is to be formed in Washington. It will be composed of those who make and play bamboo shepherd's pipes and will be affiliated with the American National Pipers' Guild which was started about two years ago by Miss Jennie Cossett, director of music in Union Settlement, New York City.

Miss Margaret Lambie, who pursues her interest in making and playing the pipes as a hobby, has invited others in Washington interested in the art to meet at her home tomorrow evening to discuss the formation of a guild. The meeting will be only for adults. When the senior guild is under way it is probable a junior group will be formed also, to include the boys and girls who have learned how to make the pipes and play them.

Miss Lambie, three years ago, did volunteer teaching at the Y. W. C. A. and at All Souls' Unitarian Church but, when some of her older students were able to carry on the instruction, she gave up teaching and left it in their hands.

Only those who make their own pipes are eligible to membership in the guild. The art is ancient and links those who follow it in a timeless and universal bond of friendship and interest, Miss Lambie points out.

Miss Cossett, who has spent two summers in England, studying with members of the guild there, will be invited to come to Washington in the spring to spend a week-end and give instruction to members here. She was here last spring, bringing a group of her pipers from Union Settlement to participate in the Folk Festival sponsored by The Washington Post.

The American National Guild has a scholarship to send pipers from this country to England to study, and the local guild, when it is established, may undertake some similar project.

Agata Borzi will be the featured artist on the program.

MISS GENEVIEVE HENDRICKS, who studied interior decorating in Paris, Vienna and Munich before returning here to embark on the work as her profession, will speak Monday at the meeting of the art section of the Twentieth Century Club, of which Mrs. Harry W. Price is chairman. The meeting will be at 2 p. m. in the Y. W. C. A.

ONE OF THE YOUNGEST of the presidents of the State Federations of Women's Clubs who will be here for the board meeting of the General Federation this week will be Mrs. Joseph Maning Perkins, who was recently elected without opposition to head the Texas federation. The State membership is 60,000.

Mrs. Perkins is the former Emily Gleason, of Gleasondale, Mass., and is a graduate of Boston University.

CLEO JOHNSON, new queen of Bethel 6, Georgetown Chapter, of the Order of Job's Daughters, presided last night at the first meeting since taking office. She named committees for her six-months term as head of the chapter, with Virginia Dent, Evelyn Thring, Louise Wiegal and Laura Mae McDaniel as chairmen of the various groups.

REBECCA DIAL, daughter of former Senator Nathaniel Barstow Dial and Mrs. Dial, of South Carolina, tomorrow will open a series of lessons on creative speech at the Portal Bookshop Studio. She is the author of three plays, "No Dogs Allowed," "Undertow" and "The Pillar of Cloud" in some of which she has played leading roles. "A social Success," a one-act comedy was presented before Congressional Club in Washington.

MRS. LEROY MONTGOMERY, of South Norwalk, Conn., chairman of the motion picture committee, of the Daughters of the American Revolution, is urging that every motion picture program should have short subjects of educational value. Double feature programs generally do not permit this, she says and has suggested that every chapter chairman urge the showing of one good feature picture with good shorts, which are available to suit every program.

The afternoon group of Alpha Epsilon Alpha Chapter of Alpha Chi Omega will hold its first luncheon meeting of the new year at the residence of Mrs. A. B. Ambler, jr., 6303 Eighth street northwest, on Tuesday.

Miss Florence Armstrong, author, and former national editor of the Lyre, national organ of the Alpha Chi Omega, will give reminiscences of her early sorority experiences, and Mrs. Scott Mabry, member and portrait artist, will talk on portraiture.

First Spring Hats Are Flippant and Frivolous, Designed Strictly for Merry-Making

Mary Haworth's Mail

Widow Complains of Psychic Exhaustion, as Result Of Listening to Self-Pitying Men's Tales of Woe

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: A widow of a year's standing, it has been my misfortune ever since my own considerable loss to meet men in Washington who have suffered severe emotional repercussions in the past, who want to avoid further entangling alliances like the plague, and who are still nursing hang-overs from ill-fated marital ventures.

Having been born with a gentle, amiable disposition, I seem to fit naturally into the role of Salvation Army lassie; and being endowed, moreover, with a fair amount of charm, intelligence and discretion, I am getting wearier and wearier of listening to misunderstood men's tales of woe. My head aches, my ears droop and my very spirits are beginning to lag under this constant bombardment of woe—woe—woe.

Much has been said in your column about how to hook and hold a man. So how, now, about an article on how to hold a woman, who has just so much sympathy—and no more—to dispense to sympathy-hungry men? Or do these men consider that it is a privilege for a woman to be permitted to listen to their introspective ramblings? My ego—what there is left of it—is outraged, and I hope you publish this outburst just to show them where they make their mistakes.

PAL.

Conversational Blotter

DEAR PAL: I am inclined to believe it is a woman's own fault if she allows herself to be continually washed under, to the point of chronic exhaustion, by wave after wave of a man's (or men's) conversationally narrated woes. She must be a rather unresourceful conversationalist herself, to permit such a thing to happen. She is under no social obligation whatsoever to essay the roles of either father confessor or mother-comforter to odd and sundry men. And that doesn't mean that she has to turn a deaf ear to what they may have to say, either. Nor that her only means of curtailing such deluges of self-commiseration is to show a lack of sympathy, understanding or responsiveness.

If she is, indeed, possessed of a magnetic amount of human (and humane) understanding; if she is witty, kindly, wise and (to use the quaint old phrase) womanly in essence; endowed, as you say, with "a fair amount of charm, intelligence and discretion," she can almost effortlessly win a man out of a mood of self pity; direct his thoughts and conversational talents to other texts than the obvious and banal theme of personal case history; and still have let him talk to his heart's content.

When a man is given to worrying a favorite topic (and nine times out of ten, and this goes for all of us, that topic is the subject of self) threadbare during the course of an evening, or a friendship, with a woman—more often than not it is because she simply doesn't know how to give lift and variety and direction to the conversational interchange, as the average man almost instinctively looks to her to do. Thus denied leadership and spirited co-operation, he falls into an introspective vein of thought, and ambles on and on in a stream-of-consciousness sort of way. And it's a toss-up, at the evening's end, who is most bored and exhausted—the speaker or his audience. Most persons who have yielded inordinately to a passing temptation or opportunity to speak unreservedly to a casual acquaintance on the proposition of self, afterward feel like kicking themselves for having done so. And with the curious perversity of human nature, being displeased with their own performance, they are apt, unconsciously, to hold the other fellow as much at fault as themselves. Maybe they're right.

I think most women tend to lean too heavily on the moss-covered theory that the way to win and hold a man's attention is to encourage him to talk about himself, and to simulate a fascinated, bated-breath interest. As a matter of fact, one John Bleecker, writing in a book called, "The Way to His Heart," makes the point that, at the end of a hard day's work, the average man finds real mental stimulus and psychic refreshment in the company of a woman who has well-defined thoughts of her own, and a faculty for expressing them in clear-cut fashion. In other words, he doesn't mind in the least, and actually enjoys, having the woman supply the conversational leads and carry the conversational load. The woman who can do this, without sounding the didactic or nonstop talker note, he considers "good company." The woman who, on the other hand, follows his lead with a sheep-like obedience, and swallows his offerings like a nestling robin, is apt to rate, at best, as a sweet little thing who runs to the dull side. Sympathetic, of course, but unimaginative and unexciting; a nice person to see when you want to le off steam, but hardly the woman to sweep you off your feet and banish the vapors of fretfulness.

So, if you submit yourself as a conversational blotter, don't blame the men who use you as such. As someone has said, a good offensive is the best defensive, and therefore I suggest that you make a practise, hereafter, of getting in a few licks of your own. Conversation is a game, the object of which should be the mutual exchange of provocative or unusual or appealing ideas, or personal experiences which yield a feasible and applicable philosophy of conduct, or instructive information of a useful kind. The person who merely sits in at the game, in a passive or receptive capacity, taking no active or contributory part, can scarcely expect any better fate than that of being wordbludgeoned into a state of utter ennui.

Learn to Write Radio Scripts

CONGRATULATIONS FOR Helen! Her first radio script is successful and everyone's prophesying a bright future for her.

How did Helen make the grade? What's the magic formula? She didn't go at writing blindly. She studied the special requirement for radio writing.

You, too, can easily learn them. Did you know that the demand for good radio writers outruns the supply? Know the technique and there's no telling how far you may go.

Remember, in writing for a radio audience you're appealing to the ear, not the eye. You have only three ways to get your story across—speech, sound effects and music.

Have your characters use short sentences and phrases:

HE: What's wrong?

SHE: Listen! Do you hear that?

HE: Hurry. We've got to get out. The dam's giving way . . .

Make the action in your drama vivid. Use strong verbs in the active voice—"are" and "is," rather than "were" and "was." Avoid too many adjectives. Strive for vivid simplicity. Don't call a character a "poor specimen of humanity." Say he's a "washout."

A big help, too, if you listen critically to radio programs. Keep a notebook and jot down little tricks, such as how sound effects and music are used to help tell the story.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "Self-Instruction In Writing," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

THE FIRST spring hats of the season are definitely on the frivolous side. Designed for merrymaking, they are bedecked with perky taffeta bows, vari-colored flowers or flippant flying veils. Many of the hats have miniature crowns made entirely of bright clusters of flowers. Others are turban, poke bonnet or stovepipe shapes. All are gay, individual and feminine. There is sufficient variety in this collection for each woman to find a becoming model. And her selection may be dashing and as extreme as she pleases, for these hats are made specifically for festive occasions and not office wear. For general street and sports wear there are sleek, well-fitted felts and suedes or tailored straw hats minus veils, flowers, or frou-frou of any kind.

DESIGNED to accentuate youthful naivete, the demure felt hat in fuchsia shades (at upper left) has a cluster of pale green chartreuse flowers falling over the brow. Below this is another gay, floral hat made in a bright concoction of red and pink flowers. A twisted band of orchid tulle holds the hat lightly but securely to the head

Drawings by E. C. Goulard.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, Jan. 14.

ONE OF the big questions of the current theatrical season here has now been answered. We know who will play the leading lucky lot has fallen upon a cute chatterbox named Lucia Lull (a sad misnomer), who is a daughter of Wetumpka, role in the road company of Clara Boothe's comedy hit, "Kiss The Boys Goodby." The Alabama. Everybody is happy, including the producer, the author and especially Lucia.

ALICE HUGHES

The little Lull girl, who has chestnut brown hair and enough vivacity for six, has been looking for a job since last spring. Now she has this choice tidbit, even though it takes her away from Broadway and into the other large cities of the country. And don't think this role is any cinch. When added up it comes to 44 typewritten pages, or almost as heavy a job as the uncut "Hamlet." Oddly enough Lucia's home town is only 75 miles from Union Springs, the old family home of the now famous Helen Claire, who created the part in the New York production.

Another odd coincidence lies in the fact that Lucia, like Helen, did her best to take the edge off her heavy Southern accent during a stay of several years in the North. Both girls thought that it would type them too seriously in a career which demands versatility of speech. And now Lucia just as Helen before her, will have to speak a rich Southern in the juicy role of Cindy Lou. Up to now Lucia's career has been comparatively trivial. But if she is a success as Cindy Lou, and can assume and discard her sectional speech at will "honey chile" Lull seems set on the high road to theatrical success. Alabama certainly develops the troupers. Tallulah Bankhead, Helen Claire, Lucia Lull. Who's next, Alabama?

GIRL ABOUT TOWN:—My greatest pleasure so far this winter has been the tremendous success scored by Elsie Janis in the first of her Sunday night recitals. After an absence of nearly a decade the long-legged girl from Columbus, Ohio, came back to the public that adores her, and pleased it most by ending her performance with that memorable acrobatic waltz of many years ago, complete with kicks and cartwheels. No performer on the American stage has ever done anything more delightful, and to see Elsie do it now, at the brink of 50, is a heart-warming experience.

I have long been a firm believer in body massage for many of the ails which afflict the human flesh, and am very proud to learn that in spite of my 105 pounds and vaguely anemic appearance am considered one of the two toughest subjects of the great establishment I frequent. My rival for stamina in the punching and kneading department is the Countess Willamatz, who is known to her friends as Babs. Thus for the first time in my checkered life I share an honor with a real countess, though I once sat next to the Grand Duchess Marie at a fashion show and did feel extremely Romanoff for an hour . . .

I had a good look at Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., at a restaurant not long ago. Mrs. Junior was wearing a gown of smoky gray chiffon, knife pleated from the camisole top to the hem. She also sported three chiffon handkerchiefs—blue, fuchsia and gray pulled through her envelope purse. And to top it all her hair was graced with a silver snood. Some girl . . . The newspaper headlines here which gave me the biggest guffaw—"City Debs Get Respite Over Christmas." Bless their darling little hearts. I hope Santa put a good night's sleep in sheer stockings.

Practice Before Mirror Corrects Bad Gestures

Movement, Not Size Or Shape, Determines Hands' Gracefulness

By Carolyn Abbott.

HANDS ACROSS the restaurant table, shuffling bridge cards, balancing a tea cup, driving a car or performing the daily household tasks tell a story of grace and beauty or awkwardness and neglect. And since the hands are ever on display the characteristics they reveal should be flattering and not embarrassing.

The length and form of the fingers predetermine their natural beauty. But movement, not size and shape, determine whether or not they will express clumsiness or gracefulness. If your gestures are gauche, a little exercising will correct the fault. Practice various movements before your mirror to work out the most natural and charming position of the hands. Never mind feeling foolish before the mirror; it is better to look and feel a little silly while practicing than to feel ill at ease in public.

To increase the shapeliness of the hands, massage each finger individually with a rotary motion. With elbows straight out at the side, interlock the fingers and pull hard, allowing each finger to work against the other. This slenderizes the fingers, makes them more graceful and keeps them firm by stimulating the circulation.

Rolling a marble between the thumb and finger is another device for developing flexible movements and keeping the skin and muscles firm.

A relaxed wrist gives the impression of great poise, while a stiff, rigid wrist spoils the effect of easy, fluid movements. To lessen the rigidity of the wrist, grasp a large piece of cellophane or a towel and twist.

Massage helps to stave off wrinkles that are caused by age or neglect. Hold the hands up, rub their backs downward toward the wrists. Use the same stroke that you would in putting on a pair of gloves. And if the hands show signs of roughness from wintry weather, give them a complete reconditioning treatment.

Here are five reconditioning pointers:

First, wash your hands thoroughly in soap and water. Dry them carefully.

Second, give them a rub down cream down the back and across the wrist. Don't neglect the pocket between the thumb and forefinger or the spaces between the fingers. Use a little extra cream around each knuckle and with hand cream. Work the across the bracelet line at the wrist.

Third, give your cuticle a quick pick-up with cuticle remover.

Exercise Essential to Beauty; Care of Skin And Nails Important

Dip a cotton-tipped orangewood stick into the liquid, work it around the moon and carefully around the rest of the nail.

Fourth, make it a practice to rub the hands with cream each night with olive oil or an oily lubricating cream. Sleep in a pair of thin, cotton mesh gloves at least once a week to keep the hands soft.

Fifth, check your polish to see if there isn't a nick anywhere. If one or two nails need redoing, it is better to remove the polish entirely and to start anew rather than risk a patchwork job.

Keeping the hands in good condition is far preferable to making excuses about their appearance.

REALIZING that beautiful, perfectly groomed hands are an asset both professionally and socially, Carole Lombard, Hollywood actress (shown above), s ets aside at least ten minutes each day to keep them in perfect condition.

Patients Told Not to Indulge In Self-Pity

Trained Nurse Gives Hints to Quicken Recovery

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

"How to Enjoy Ill Health" is a very sensible book, in spite of its smarty title, by a trained nurse, Miss Cecilia L. Schulz.

She has observed that when you are suddenly up against the prospect of going to bed for a while—whether because of a germ, a surgeon, a baby, an accident, or a rest—there are all sorts of questions which keep hammering in your head, and nobody has time or patience to answer them. So she has given some blanket advice to one and all.

She starts off with the tried and true one of "Don't feel sorry for yourself." Self-pity retards your recovery and is the forerunner of a depressed state of mind. "Don't be afraid to be afraid" sound like a contradiction of the first, but Miss Schulz is right when she says it is not fear of pain that sends the newsick into a lather. It is fear of the unknown. So ask about things. Doctors, I find, are so used to a routine that they forget the patient doesn't know about it, and omit explaining.

Miss Schulz thinks there are very few natural "good" patients. You may think you are a good patient, but the chances are you have guessed wrong. There are only three kinds of natural good patients: (1) the born optimist (they usually do not come out in the end quite as successfully as they thought they would); (2) this class lacks imagination—they are good patients because they accept what comes their way with the impassivity of an oyster, (3) the adventurers; they like a stay in the hospital because it is new and exciting. And do they bring stories home when they get out!

Here are the rules:

(1) Wear an easily laundered, starched white uniform so you will rustle just like a real nurse. Also wear low-heeled, comfortable shoes.

(2) Never whisper in or around the sick room. Whispering is nerve-racking to the sick; they think you're talking about how ill they are.

(3) Keep a record. Record temperature, pulse, general condition, appetite, excretions, medicaments, etc.

(4) Don't "entertain" the patient. Silences in the sick room are restful.

(5) Ask the doctor for directions regarding visitors and visiting hours.

Your Favorite Sauerkraut Dish May Win Prize

Sauerkraut, tart, spicy and memorable, will be the theme of the new Post Recipe contest. Its flavor may be spiked with onion or garlic, or made bland with apple blendings. It may be a boiled or a steamed dish, or may be baked with spareribs, bacon, sausages or scrapple.

Whatever your favorite sauerkraut formula, enter a kitchen-tested recipe in this cash prize contest. Your originality and effort may win for you a first prize of $3, a second prize of $2, or one of three additional $1 awards.

Although little imagination usually is exercised in the preparation of sauerkraut, this hearty dish offers infinite variety when blended with ham or fresh pork leftovers, or when used as a stuffing for chops. Mrs. A. Hoffman, of Arlington, Va., realizing its economical and palatable virtues, has asked that it be made the theme of this contest. All formulas, carefully written, must be mailed before January 21 to Alice Clayton, The Post Food Editor.

Post Display Home Has Old World Charm

Picturesque Swedish Architecture Features Arora Hills Dwelling

Travelers in the Scandinavian peninsular are invariably impressed by the quaint beauty of its houses, toylike delicacy of the pretty villages nestled among evergreens at the foot of snow-capped mountains, or the quiet dignity of its towns grouped about ancient churches.

Picturesque styling of dwellings of those northern lands has been imparted to the design of the first Washington Post Display Home of the new year, having its initial presentation today. Described as a "Swedish manor house," this dwelling is one in which Old World charm has been bestowed on a home that is as new as tomorrow.

Follows Traditional Lines

Designed by A. F. Thelander in traditional Scandinavian architecture, the facade of this exhibit home is remarkable for its simple yet compelling attractiveness. The roof descends gently to vertical panelling on the upper story, with two cozy bays rounding out of the white-coated brick casing the first floor on either side of the inviting entryway.

Shade trees and graceful shrubs complete the pleasing front of this different and refreshing offering of the Duborg-Hallock Agency, in Aurora Hills, Va., just three blocks south of a business and shopping center along Arlington Ridge and close by the Army-Navy Country Club.

Fine View Afforded

The location affords a delightful vista. Seen from the bank of windows in the spacious studio living room is the glistening white dome of the Capital beyond the broad Potomac. In this room is a massive corner fireplace with an elevated hearth. The balance of the first floor is devoted to the dining room, kitchen and a fine bedroom, or study and bath.

The second floor contains two master rooms and bath and a single room. In the basement, which is virtually another floor, are a recreation room and bar, maid's room and bath, furnace room and laundry, and two-car garage. Built by the Duborg Construction Co., developer of many home communities, it represents a lasting investment in carefree home ownership with its fine construction and materials. The home is located at 1039 Twenty-sixth street south, Aurora Hills, in nearby Virginia.

U. S. Building Aid Stirs Criticism

Criticism of continued Federal assistance in apartment building was voiced at the Middle Atlantic Conference of the Building Owners and Managers Association here last week. In a discussion held by Col. Olin Ellis, of Guilford Realty Co., Baltimore, and Dr. Ernest M. Fisher, economic adviser of the Federal Housing Administration, Col. Ellis disapproved of the large number of apartment units that have been erected in Baltimore through FHA loans. He said these apartments had increased vacancies from 5 to 11 per cent and that if more were built the results would be disastrous to property owners in that city.

Dr. Fisher reviewed FHA's policy and said there was no intention on the part of this agency to approve projects which would be injurious to private owners. He invited cooperation of building managers in every city in making surveys as to need or lack for FHA projects.

After the discussion the conference adopted the following: "Resolved: That the building of a great number of apartments through Federal Housing Administration guaranteed loans has, in many instances, caused an oversupply of apartments and consequent injury to an established industry with large investments in housing and, therefore, should be discontinued, except where clearly shown by a survey made in co-operation with local real estate owners that such apartments are necessary and cannot be provided otherwise."

Among directors elected were the following from Washington: Lew S. Mohler, of Joseph H. Himes Co., and F. Wallace Stoever, of Shannon & Luchs Co.

Permits Asked for 2 Apartment Buildings

Additional apartment building construction is forecast by application for permits filed at the District Building recently. Gelman Construction Co. will erect an eight-story apartment structure at 2730 Wisconsin avenue northwest at an estimated cost of $225,000. Sam Novak is the designer. Israel Reiskin is the builder of another apartment building to be constructed at 551-557 Lebaum street southeast, at a cost of $40,000. G. T. Santmyers is architect for the latter.

To Erect 5 Homes

R. H. Sanford will construct five two-story brick homes at 1918-1926 C street northeast, costing $22,000. G. T. Santmyers is the architect.

Six Dwellings Planned

L. C. Miller will erect six two-story brick dwellings at 1616-1626 Fort drive southeast, casting $24,000, from plans prepared by G. T. Santmyers, architect.

Home Sales Set 10-Yr. Record In December

Survey Shows Real Estate Activity Better

National Association Finds Capital Supply The Finest in Years

The thirty-second semiannual survey of the market by the National Association of Real Estate Boards finds activity better than a year ago, a capital supply which is the finest in years, lower trends in interest rates, rent stability and home sites sales increasing. In short the market nationally comes into 1939 with a pace that in most factors already matches or surpasses its prerecession gait.

The survey, compiled from confidential reports of member boards in 274 cites, bring out:

1. Increased supply of capital available for real estate loans, and, even more important, continued tendency to lower interest rates. The survey shows the most generally favorable situation in respect to both interest rates and mortgage money supply that has ever been recorded in the country's real estate history.

2. Beginning, however, of a differential between old and new residential properties due to difference in outlook for financing for these types of properties, a differentiation that city after city reports will be accentuated in FHA financing for existing homes is allowed to go out of existence on July 1, 1939.

3. Undersupply of single family dwellings in 34 per cent of cities, despite the revival of home building and despite the appreciable new doubling up of families which accompanied business recession.

4. Substantial activity in the market for homesites, evidence of preparation of family after family for new home building. A measurable upswing here, despite the recession in general business activity which began in the last months of 1937, is symptomatic of the underlying strength of the real estate outlook.

Other points in today's situation are:

Market activity higher than last year at this time in 33 per cent of the cities reporting, and abreast with the rate which opened last year in 38 per cent. The survey of six months ago found only 9 per cent more active and 74 per cent less active than they had been a 12-month earlier. That was in comparison with the post-depression peak activity reached for real estate in May 1937.

Selling prices steady in 64 per cent of the cities. Up a median of 10 per cent in about one-eighth. Still affected by the recession in almost a quarter of them. Where they are down the median drop is 10 per cent. Prices for residential property are forecast to rise during 1939 in 55 per cent reporting. Rise expected is ordinarily about 15 per cent.

Capital for mortgage loans seeking investment in 77 per cent of the cities; loans seeking capital in only 13 per cent. This favorable situation is even more general than at the May 1937 peak. Interest rates in 29 per cent of the cities lower than last year at this time, when they were already the lowest in history. In 69 per cent, steady at last year's level. Rising in only 2 per cent.

Market for subdivision or suburban lots, improved over last year at this time in one-third of the cities reporting. Decline is shown in only one-sixth. Vacant lots sold for homesites during the year exceeded considerably the number of homes built in cities reporting. One hundred lots were sold for every 73 homes built. Homesite sales averaged one lot for every 243 persons in the urban population. Home building reported by the identical cities averaged one new single family dwelling for every 337 people.

Rents for single family houses, which advanced steadily from 1934 to the end of 1937, have felt the effect of new residential construction, are stationary in 64 per cent of cities reporting. They are up in 15 per cent, but lower than last year at this time in 21 per cent. The rise or drop, where it occurs, has been only about 5 per cent in the average city. A 10 per cent rise, however, is reported by one-quarter of the "up" cities, and a 10 per cent drop by over a third of the "down." The national rent level for houses in now about 82 per cent of the level prevailing in 1926.

& Phelps to the mortgage department of that organization.

Another low cost housing project started last week with the breaking of ground for Arlington Village, new development of Gustave Ring, on Columbia pike at North Cleveland road, in Arlington, Va. The estimated cost of the privately financed operation is $3,000,000, and it will contain 655 units and stores.

RING

Born at Weston, W. Va., in 1904, Mr. Ring entered the employ of Morris Cafritz in 1920, as a messenger, becoming an official of the Cafritz organization in 1930. In 1931, he began erection of the Westchester apartments building, and after building homes, began planning of Colonial Village, Va., final unit of which was completed in 1937 He next launched Brentwood village, Md., 450-unit project, completed last year. The Norwood Apartments, 400-unit operation, at Baltimore, followed. Then came the Marlyn, air conditioned apartment structure, in Washington, also completed in 1938.

A son was born recently to Mr. and Mrs. George M. Carpenter. Mr. Carpenter is manager of Frank S. Phillips' office.

Cyril Jones, of the sales department of Thomas J. Fisher & Co., Inc., has returned from a Florida vacation.

Mrs. Mary C. Adams, secretary at the office of Thomas J. Owen & Son, has been visiting in Florida.

Secretary Lester Rosenberg, of the Cafritz Co., has concluded a holiday vacation.

Arthur Brown has been employed as a bookkeeper at the Paul T. Stone Corporation's office.

Miss Dorothy Patterson, secretary at Frank S. Phillips' office, is back from a visit in Alabama.

Emil Lutz has become associated with J. Wesley Buchanan's sales organization.

Oscar R. Scholz, of Robert O. Scholz's office, has been on a Florida journey.

Salesman W. R. Randolph, of Realty Associates, Inc., has returned from a trip to North Carolina.

Robert R. Jones is a new member of J. Garrett Beitzell's sales staff.

Mrs. S. N. Richards, assistant secretary of Washington Real Estate Board, recently marked her fourteenth year of service with that organization.

Charles N. Casey and George A. Meek are announced as new salesmen for F. E. Westenberger.

Marshall to Head New Miller Unit

W. C. & A. N. Miller have established a public relations bureau with Joseph W. Marshall, former director of Washington Better Business Bureau, in charge. The new department is designed to stimulate public interest in better type homes and to disseminate information important to persons contemplating real estate purchases.

The Miller firm invites civic groups, business organizations, clubs and fraternal bodies to avail themselves of the speaker service which will be a feature of the bureau. Informal talks on such subjects as "Putting the Community in a Test Tube," "Home Site Selection" and "Methods of Home Financing," are available without cost to civic groups desiring them. Requests for speaker service should be addressed to the bureau at 1119 Seventeenth street northwest.

Mr. Marshall is a local man, who has also served as assistant advertising manager of Woodward & Lothrop, and of John Wanamaker, in Philadelphia. In entering the real estate field, he is following earlier generations of his family who were active in the development of Washington during the late part of the last century and the early 1900's.

Storage Closet Good Addition to Home

Storage closets to hold the winter clothes in summer and the summer clothes in winter are the greatest sort of convenience for the housewife who has to put these clothes away and are much kinder to the clothes than are trunks. Almost every house has a place where such a closet can be built.

Seven Two-Story Dwellings

Construction of seven two-story brick dwellings at 414-426 Nineteenth street northeast, is planned by Mary L. Hall. The estimated cost of the project is $35,000. G. T. Santmyers is the architect.

Loans Give Work To 48,500 Men

Chicago, Ill.—Enough construction work to give year-round jobs to 48,500 men was financed by savings, building and loan associations during the first 11 months of 1938, the United States Building and Loan League reported recently. Out of $734,062,000 lent by the associations for all purposes from January through November, the league shows that $201,306,000 was spent for the construction of new houses and $54,598,000 to repair and remodel existing ones.

On a basis of average weekly wages of $29 in the construction industry, according to Bureau of Labor statistics and the percentage of construction and remodeling expenditures usually paid to labor, the league finds that a week's work for 2,518,800 men or a year's work for 48,500 has been financed from this source.

In both construction and modernization loan volume, November, 1938, made a better showing than the same month the year before, according to A. D. Theobald, Chicago, assistant vice president of the league. About $1,200,000 more went into new construction loans and $100,000 more into modernization and repair advances. November was thus the fourth successive month of the year in which construction loans were made in greater volume than during the same month of 1937 and continued to some degree the margin of advantage in building volume which the year just had over its predecessor from the summer months on, he said.

New Floor Better Than Too Many Patches

Old, worn-out wood floors are hardly worth the care they require to keep them looking reasonably presentable. When they have reached the stage where there are badly worn depressions in front of doorways, or where the grain has begun to splinter, or when the cracks between the boards are so wide they cannot be decently filled, then a new floor should be laid.

The new wood floors may be used as the finish or as the base for linoleum or various types of composition tiles.

Indirect Lighting Gaining Favor

A combination of the varied types of lighting—indirect, wall and ceiling fixtures, and lamps—presents the ideal arrangement for proper lighting of a home.

All these methods of lighting have their uses, but consideration of the lighting problem involved and application of the best method usually answer the question.

In the purely utilitarian rooms, such as the kitchen, laundry, utility room, etc., ceiling lights for general illumination will suffice. In special places, such as over the kitchen sink, possibly some indirect or semi-indirect lighting may become standard and, in fact, is finding greater favor now.

In the living room, library, and other rooms for general social use, a combination of lamps and indirect lighting probably serves best. Some general illumination is needed, and the softness of indirect light serves this purpose best. For reading and for ordinary home use, lamps are preferable.

Safety Door Guards Excelsior From Flames

In the packing and forwarding of merchandise large quantities of excelsior are ordinarily indispensable. Materials used in packing wares frequently represent fire hazards.

A large built-in bin in an important merchandising concern contains excelsior. The lid of the bin is held open by a sash weight. Should fire occur a fusible link mounted on the inside of the cover releases the weight closing the bin and smothering the blaze.

Home Building Jumps, Realty Board Reveals

Residential Market Seeks to Serve Lower Income Levels

By Herbert U. Nelson,
Executive Vice President, National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Significant in the showing made by private residential construction during the last year is the growing shrinkage in dollar volume as compared with the number of units. The Department of Commerce estimates that in 1938 we built some 360,000 units, as against only 327,000 in 1937. But while our number of units was thus 10 per cent greater than that of the previous year, the dollar volume of this construction may fall below the 1937 total. This is a real and striking measure of the degree to which new building is being directed toward serving lower levels of income. There is every indication that the totals for 1939 will show even more marked change in this direction.

In number of residential units our current rate of building is approximately double that of last year at this time, according to the index compiled monthly for the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Subdivision Sales Upheld

A notable advance in State laws protecting the public against misrepresentation or fraud in real estate transactions has been the California provision, enacted in 1935 at the initiative of the California Real Estate Association, which has provided that before subdivision lots can be offered for sale certain facts with respect to ownership, area and the like, including a true statement of the condition of the title to the land, particularly including all encumbances upon it, must be filed with the real estate commissioner, who is in charge of the licensing of real estate brokers and salesmen. The commissioner, as part of his regular duties under the real estate license law, is given the right to prohibit sales if he finds anything which constitutes misrepresentation or fraud. Hearing and review on the case is, of course, provided.

The constitutionality of this provision has just been upheld by the California Supreme Court, which said:

Police Power Held Valid

"The assertion that this is not valid police power legislation because it benefits only the purchasers and lessees of subdivided real estate, and not the whole public, is without substance. The police power may be, and usually is exercised for the purpose of protecting particular classes of the public in need of such protection, and it is rare indeed that a single law includes everyone in the scope of its regulations. The object of the present law . . . is obviously legitimate; and the method, involving investigation and disclosure of certain essential facts, and a protection for the innocent purchaser against loss of his land by foreclosure of the underlying mortgage, is perfectly reasonable."

The decision is heartening to the whole movement for strengthening real estate license laws, which now exist in 31 States, the District of Columbia and Hawaii and which are to be proposed for a number of other States at the legislative sessions now opening.

The California law provides that if lands to be subdivided are subject to lien or encumbrance or are held only under option or in trust, it is unlawful to sell the lots unless provision exists enabling the vendor to deliver title to each parcel sold free of such encumbrance, upon completion of all payments and provisions required to be made by or performed by the vendee.

Fine Home Market Activities Resumed

Activity has resumed in the finer residential market, one property of mansion type being announced today. The size, location and architecture of this structure make it suitable for residential, club, school or embassy purposes. Situated a short distance above Dupont Circle, it has an elevator, garden and three-car garage.

The home, owned by a former United States Senator and Ambassador to Germany, is being presented by Horace H. Westcott & Co. It is located at 1539 Eighteenth street northwest.

6 Dwellings Planned

Six two-story brick dwellings are planned by Northeast Construction Co. at 2001-2011 C street northeast, R. B. Saunders is designer of the houses, costing $30,000.

Trees Embellish M. L. Stone Home

Trees form both a protective and attractive setting for a home. One dwelling having such an advantage, has a spacious corner lot shaded by a wide variety of them. This house has a large reception hall and a living room, an entire end of the latter being paneled around built-in bookcases and large open fireplace.

A wide screened porch adjoins the living room and a built-in corner cabinet and crystal chandelier feature the dining room. A kitchen, breakfast nook, powder room and lavatory complete the first floor plan. Upstairs are three bedrooms and two baths. A third story is completely finished, offering play space for children. The basement houses a recreation room with fireplace and knotty pine paneling together with oil-heating and air-conditioning plants, and built-in garage.

Situated at 3633 Yuma street northwest, the house is presented by M. L. Stone, owner and builder.

Life's Home To Be in 18th Century Style

Adam, Chippendale and Hepplewhite Furniture Will Be Adopted

As its guiding slogan in furnishing the local demonstration home of Life Magazine, the decorating staff of Lansburgh & Bros., department store has paraphrased words of the song to read, "Be it ever so beautiful, we still want it livable." The general scheme of decoration throughout this house will be in eighteenth century English style, taking in Adam, Sheraton, Chippendale and Hepplewhite and introducing some Swedish modern and French provincial styles.

Color tones for the first floor will include soft beiges, blue-green, henna rose and cocoa. On the second floor there will be a predominance of white, accented with French blue and tones of coral which are prevalent and popular today. Several innovations tending toward the ingenious in decorating, yet which are not, in any way, bizarre, will be noticeable in this house and will do much to add to its charm and livability.

In the last few months Cafritz Construction Co. has been developing this home inspired by a national endeavor to create a sentiment among thousands of renters who could afford to own homes of their own. Plans for these homes were prepared by architects secured by Life and Architectural Forum magazines to design homes purchasable by families within the $2,000 to $10,000 income brackets.

Morris Cafritz, president of the company, selected a charming location in Greenwich Forest community as a site for the Washington example of this project, and has put into its construction and equipment all the facilities of his organization. It will be a model home in every respect—construction, convenience, location and neighborhood. Inspection will reveal exceptional features not always found in homes comparable in price.

It is with civic interest that Mr. Cafritz has co-operated in furtherance of the plan and has made the local home one of outstanding character. The location is at 5720 Lambeth road, only 20 motor minutes from downtown—out Wisconsin avenue to the Bank of Bethesda, Md., turning into Old Georgetown road, three blocks to Wilson lane and then left. Persons will be interested in seeing this home as its construction progresses.

New Finishes

Two new finishes called chateau white (which is a soft grayed ivory) and chateau blue (a shade of blue not too pale in color) are cery smart for occasional pieces in French Provincial rooms where fruitwood or rubbed finish walnut predominate.

Catalogues Arriving With New Flowers

All-American Awards For Tested Varieties Awaited With Interest

By Katherine B. Pozer.

The arrival of seed and nursery catalogues in January marks the beginning of the gardener's year. The reading of these colorful and interesting books causes many gardens to bloom on paper which are never planted. Many of the new and much talked of things appear for the first time in the winter catalogues, and they, with the vast array of older favorites, often tempt the enthusiast beyond the capacity of both pocketbook and garden space.

There is an increasing interest in the new introductions, and in the All-American Awards for 1039, usually made about this time. The flowers which are given this award have been pre-tested in 12 sections of the country for a year and the worthwhile ones chosen from those submitted by the producers. One of the test gardens is located at Breeze Hill, the garden of Dr. Horace MacFarland at Harrisburg, Pa. Many local gardeners have seen the trial plots there, with the new plants. Last year there was one particularly lovely pink petunia, with large frilled blossoms.

Petunias took first place in last year's awards and several were included. Following close behind were marigolds.

Petunia Wins Favor

Horticulture, the official organ of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, reported on further testing of some of last year's All American slections. The tests were made last summer at Stockbridge, Mass., in the garden center. The petunia Salmon Supreme, which caused much interest last year when it was given ranking place in the award, apparently gave a good account of itself. Horticulture says; "It is an excellent bedding petunia, reaching a height of about one foot, producing freely branching plants literally covered with single salmon pink blossoms over the entire season. Although a very large percentage of the plants on trial at the Center came true to type, I might add that I have received numerous reports that the seeds of this variety have not always done so. However, the true Salmon Supreme of which a large bed was on trial at the Center, attracted much attention and many favorable comments."

Of other flowers in last year's All-American selection the report says: "Pansy Coronation Gold—has proved a really worthwhile addition to the well-known varieties. They are often three inches in diameter with lightly ruffled edges."

"Calliopsis Golden Crown—a strong growing variety producing large orange yellow or gold flowers in great abundance on plants growing two feet tall. Some of the blossoms have a double row of petals—flowers excellent for cutting."

"Petunia Orchid Beauty—large lilac orchid in color and fully double—attracted considerable attention because of its color—plants sturdy and good size—did not prove as floriferous as other double varieties."

Others Tested

"Japanese petunia, Gaiety—proved to be a strong-growing variety—color rose or light red rose with white colorings—flowers double or semi-double, large and fringed—listed as a dwarf variety, at center grew over a foot tall."

"Petunia Jopaz of topaz rose—one of the best to be included in recent trials—flowers single about 2 inches in diameter—erect in habit of growth, while flowers are produced in great abundance and hold color well—height about 18 inches—attracted great deal of attention."

Another flower of unusual merit reported on from the Stockbridge Garden Center was nierembergia hippomanica (cup flower), a novelty of last season. It was found to be particularly suited for rock gardens and its growth at the center is described as "Petunia-like but not as deeply funneled, about 1¼ inches in diameter, a delicate lavender—blending beautifully with gray rocks. The seed were started in March in order to give a long season of bloom from July to October. These dwarf, well-flowered plants were well accepted and many will include them in their next year's flower list."

"Among other plants which gave satisfactory results are the new dwarf helichrysums. These plants reached a height of only 15 inches and were literally covered with blooms. The lace verbene Zaluzianskya villosa is an interesting plant 6 inches tall covered with small lavender starlike flowers, with a spot of orange in the center. It is a rather short-lived annual, flowering in June and July from seed started in early April"

Plumbers Focus On Small Homes

With most of the present building activity concentrated in the small home field, manufacturers of plumbing fixtures have been active in developing equipment that will meet the needs of builders of low cost homes, says the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau.

More than two-third of all homes financed through insured mortgages under the FHA plan had house-and-lot valuations ranging from $3,000 to $7,000 and about half of the borrowers had incomes under $2,500 annually, according to recent Government reports.

Thus to the major proportion of the residential market, low cost is vital. At the same time, the standards which have been set up by the FHA as well as private lending agencies require materials of a high quality. Thus today residential building is being directed by more effective guide posts than ever before to insure that the owner gets many years of comfortable living out of residence constructed for him.

Average Home May Have Air Conditioning

Year-round home air conditioning is now definitely within the reach of the average American family, says H. T. Richardson, chairman of the business development committee of the National Warm Air Heating and Air Conditioning Association.

Technically, he declares in a year-end review, the heating and air-conditioning industry is prepared to meet increasing demands indicated by home building forecasts for 1939.

The small home dwelling, according to Richardson, can now, without prohibitive expense, be kept comfortably warm in the severest winter and comfortably cool in the hottest summer—and constantly supplied in every room with pure, dirt, dust and pollen-free air, neither too dry nor too moist for perfect health and comfort.

"This," he goes on to say, "is the result of many improvements in practically all phases of the industry, which have now been brought together in their true relation to each other and to the general problem.

"One of the most important contributions to the recent movement into a new era of comfort standards in the American home has been the development of forced circulation of warm air for heating. Its importance consists in the fact that it not only provides an efficient and reliable method of keeping warm in winter, but is readily adaptable to the converse task of keeping cool in summer.

"Essentially, forced circulation depends upon the installation in the main return air duct close to the furnace of a centrifugal blower for forcing the air through the system instead, as formerly, of depending solely on gravity—the natural tendency of warm air to rise and cool air to descend.

"The great advantages of this method are: Room temperatures are under much better, more positive and prompt control. If the weather turns cold more warmth can be brought up much more promptly and easily by speeding up the blower than by changing the furnace drafts or building up the fire. When the weather turns warm comfort can be maintained by slowing down the blower or shutting it off entirely.

Plumbing on Farms Is 'New Frontier'

A sales potential of 5,000,000 plumbing fixtures in rural areas within the next few years as a result of the rapid advance of rural electrification was described by W. E. Price, Indiana plumbing wholesaler, in an address at a recent convention of the plumbing industry. Mr. Price declared rural electrification is creating a "new frontier" for the plumbing industry.

"There are approximately 6,000,000 farm homes in the United States," said the speaker. "Less than 15 per cent have running water; less than 10 per cent have plumbing fixtures. The REA proposes within the next few years to have electricity in 50 per cent of these homes. The installation of an electric water system in a country home means, so far as a prospective sale of plumbing fixtures is concerned, the same thing as building a new home.

"The installation of a bathroom in the farm home means also the installation of a radiator heating plant to prevent freezing of the plumbing equipment."

Mr. Price stressed the fact that water systems are the key to plumbing sales in the rural area. "The farmer can't enjoy the convenience of modern plumbing equipment until he has dependable pumping system."

Revival of Interest In Homes Observed

Shelter is one of the fundamental essentials of life. Beyond the basic need of shelter, however, people of the present day are giving more thought to the improvement of their places of living—to making their homes not only more convenient, comfortable and happier places in which to live, but to add to their appearance and promote an artistic environment.

Pastel Tints in Sheets Back, More Popular Than Ever With the Fastidious

7 Colors Make Pure Luxuries Of Bed Linens

Wider Hemstitching Also a New Note; Decorative and Practical

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

The next time you get involved with a sheet and a mangle just thank your lucky stars that you don't have to iron sheets for beds of olden days—for that "Great Bed of Ware" mentioned by Shakespeare, for instance. It was 12 by 18 feet and could sleep 12 people at a time. But then sheets were different in those days, too—they were usually used to wrap up in, for nightgowns and pajamas hadn't come "in" then.

No, times have changed, and I have no complaints on the whole. For sheets today seem like pure luxury if you compare them to most of the bed coverings of the past. And they're getting handsomer as well as better.

Here is the news of sheets—the pastel tints are back in and more popular than ever, say those in the know. There are seven colors to choose from in most of the stores. And colored hem sheets are still favorites of fastidious ladies.

Reinforced hemstitching is a new note—and I for one bid it welcome. This new reinforced hemstitching makes wider, more decorative hemstitching practical, too.

Handsome Monograms

The tapered weave sheet is another thing that a lady with a house ought to know about. It has extra threads woven into the center, where the wear comes. Blessings on whoever thought of that. (Have you ever cut a beginning-to-wear sheet in two and sewed the two outside edges together so it would wear out evenly? . . . well, no more need of that!)

The permanent projecting index tab is another bright idea—it enables a lady to select the right size sheet from the pile without unfolding a whole batch of sheets.

But nicest of all are the handsome monograms you'll find for sheets. At very little extra charge you can have an embroidered monogram. Then there are the appliqued monograms—big and dramatic they are. Of course, these a lady would have to do herself, or have done, they're that personal.

My pet has a broad hem of flowered percale, then below it a monogram of the flowered percale appliqued on the white percale sheet. Illustrated also is an embroidered monogram in pink on a white sheet, with appliqued scrolls of pink to frame the monogram. There are ever so many other fresh and pretty calico sprig percales that are being used for sheet borders.

The Ideal Number

The real luxury in sheets, though, is in having plenty of them and in the right sizes. Ideally, six sheets to each bed is the number that is nicest to have—with three pillow cases for each pillow. As for size, you'll find that the 108-inch length will save you a lot of wear and tear. And in width you'll want a 54-inch width sheet for a cot, a 63-inch width sheet for a single bed, a 72-inch width for the twin bed, an 81-inch width sheet for the double bed, a 90-inch width for the extra wide bed. (These sizes refer to the unwashed torn lengths—sheets measure less when made up and washed, and in recommending these sizes proper allowance is made.)

What sheets to buy—that is the question a lady is concerned about. The experts say that a good muslin sheet will give full satisfaction, and it is advised for economy, practicality and long wear. Percale is made from longer staple cotton so that it can be finer in weave and less bulky, while it is equally strong, if not stronger; percale sheets are silky in texture and luxurious to feel, but they cost more.

Linen sheets are lovely indeed, but not commonly used in America because they're expensive. But in Russia and many of the European countries that have fewer luxuries than we have, everybody sleeps on linen sheets! Whatever you buy, make sure that there isn't a lot of filling in it. Rub the fabric and if a lot of starch powders out it is "filled" and will be a very limp, flimsy fabric after washing.

I always believe that a lady should outdo herself in quality on her household linen, for a nice array of "purple and fine linen" will make her have so much more respect for herself as a homemaker. It's like nice fingernails and fine handkerchiefs for giving you that fastidious feeling.

Coal Producers Plan Ad Drive

New York, N. Y.—James P. Duffy, assistant to the president of Anthracite Industries, Inc., announces that plans have been completed for continuation of anthracite advertising throughout the winter and spring of 1939. Daily and Sunday newspapers in the anthracite burning region, with a total circulation of well over 10,000,000, have been selected to carry the message to the consumer.

In commenting upon the choice of newspapers, Mr. Duffy stated: "Newspapers were originally selected as the best medium in which to advertise anthracite. Our experience in past campaigns has justified and strengthened this decision. One important feature of the newspaper is the opportunity it gives to local business men interested in the sale and distribution of anthracite and anthracite equipment to tie up locally with the main campaign."

The advertising also features modern anthracite equipment. Convincing language educates the consumer, showing him that he has a wide choice of scientific equipment to choose from, and can obtain any combination of convenience and economy when he selects anthracite to heat his home.

Linoleum Clips Useful

When linoleum is put down over old floors, brass clips at the edges around the baseboard and at doorways make a neat appearance and are serviceable as well.

By Phil. D. Poston.

The forward strides being made by business; the vast amount of capital available for investment and the apparent teamwork on the part of business and the Government are creating everywhere increased confidence and courage. These things constitute the footings and foundation for better and bigger business—certainly for 1939—maybe longer.

For seven or eight years the man of moderate or larger means has been marking time. He avoided investments hitherto safe and attractive and refrained, as a class, from investing in a new home appropriate to his means and social background.

During the last few months this condition has reversed, and there is much evidence that 1939 will show an active demand for new homes on the part of people who are willing and ready to pay from $15,000 to $30,000.

One line of evidence to sustain these statements comes from one of Washington's developments featuring homes in the $15,000 to $40,000 price range. In recent months four homes of this type have been sold at Burnt Mills Hills, the well-known "Neighborhood of Country Homes" in Montgomery County, Md. The last and most recent sale being of the Norman, a beautiful and pretentious home on a 2½-acre wooded tract. Arch McDonald is the purchaser.

The R. E. Latimer Co., developers of this interesting and successful experiment in modern country life, coupled with the firm of Phil. D. Poston, Inc., in charge of promotion and sales, have built and sold within several years 28 homes of this higher class on one to five acres each. This organization is now going forward with plans for construction of 12 more homes of this character at Burnt Mills Hills during 1939. When completed, they will round out the development of this 135-acre tract.

There is but one house unsold out of the number recently completed. This house is known as The Gables, an English type, natural brick, with four unusually large bedrooms, three spacious baths, library, living and dining rooms, breakfast room, three lavatories, large clubroom, maid's room and two-car built-in garage.

The location of The Gables is on one of the highest elevations in Burnt Mills Hills, 400 feet altitude, and with a magnificent view of the beautiful surrounding country as well as of the Washington Monument. These views are particularly impressive from the large deck-porch opening off the living and dining rooms. One and one-half acres of attractive landscape is attached to this home.

The Latimer company plans to complete the development this year of Burnt Mills Hills. It has proven to be one of the most unusual and interesting home and community creations in the East.

Check Sewer Depth Before Planning Home

One of the most important things to be checked before starting the construction of a house, and, in fact, before considering the plans complete, is the depth of the sewer in the street.

Naturally, if there are to be any plumbing fixtures in the cellar, they must be far enough above the sewer to allow for proper drainage.

TO LIVE

Burnt Mills Hills

Is a rare privilege now enjoyed by 28 families who occupy beautiful homes of the farm-house type on 1 to 5 acres.

"THE NORMAN" — that lovely creation, occupying 2½ acres of woodlands—has just been bought by a prominent Washingtonian.

But one house remains—"The Gables"—a spacious and attractive 4-bedroom and 3-bath English type, on 1½-acre tract, with high elevation overlooking many miles of pasture and woodlands.

This highly desirable house may now be bought at a decided advantage to the purchaser in order to make way for our 1939 building program of 12 houses, which will complete the 135-acre tract.

To the family, with children, who love the beautiful, simple, fundamental things that make life a joy and worth the living, Burnt Mills Hills fulfills the heart's fondest desires.

Off the Colesville Pike, 3 miles beyond Silver Spring traffic light, and 20 minutes drive from White House.

Home Contest Sketches to Be Shown Today

Beverley Hills Shows Architects' Drawings To Suggest Entries

With the new year comes added interest in the "build your own home contest" of Permanesque Homes Village, Inc., now being held at Beverley Hills, nearby Virginia development of that corporation. Today, the community house in that neighborhood will have a showing of hundreds of architects' drawings which prospective home owners inspect for ideas in their plans for the contest in which $2,500 in prizes will be awarded.

While these sketches are attractively drawn and colored, officials of the developing corporation explain that selections do not have to be made from this exhibit for eligibility for the competition. Contestants may choose one of the drawings or obtain their own ideas from them. Competitors also are allowed to select their own architects or draw their own plans if they so desire.

In connection with the exhibition of architectural drawings is a display of many types of brick and similar materials which are used in construction of contest homes. This exhibit will be assembled in a large masonry enclosure near the community house.

Mrs. Frances Troy Northcross, home consultant, who is arranging the contest, explains that competitors need not enter sketches of expensive mansions to win its awards. The contest, she announces, is based on the need of a beautiful home for the average couple in moderate circumstances. No entry may exceed 20,000 cubic feet in content and all must be in a price range available to the average wage earner who wants a home of his own.

One of the few restrictions for eligibility is that the home must be built in the Beverley Hills development, now featured by a hostess house, which may be reached by driving over Memorial Bridge to Arlington Memorial, taking the road to the left and continuing past Little Tea House, on South Arlington Ridge road, along the ridge to Russell road, and turning right.

32d Street Plans

Three two-story masonry dwellings will be built at 6640, 6644 and 6648 Thirty-second street northwest, by M. B. Swanson, from plans of Louis R. Moss, architect. Their estimated cost is $7,750 each.

New Designs Make Kitchen More Compact

Modern Working Units Heighten Efficiency And Beauty

The kitchen is the workshop of the home. Home economists, merchandising heads of stores, architects, equipment manufacturers, and housewives have been searching for ways and means of reducing the drudgery of kitchen work.

Compactness and the arrangement of working units in the right relation to each other is what the experts have recommended. Until recently, however, it has been difficult, except at what many women regarded as a prohibitive price, to rearrange a kitchen as an efficient machine. This has been true largely because complete equipment has not been available in sizes and shapes that could be combined to fit the needs of kitchens of different dimensions and layouts.

Now, however, Sears Roebuck & Co. are showing wall cabinets, shelves, sinks, refrigerators, ranges, cupboards and table units the combination possibilities of which seem to be unlimited. The replanning of a kitchen and the complete installation of new equipment can be arranged with Sears so that a transformation can be made on short order.

The mechanized kitchen of today makes work a pleasure. The miles of walking that characterized our mother's day, can be greatly reduced.

But working efficiency has not been the only objective of kitchen planners. Beauty of design in the assembled whole as well as ease of cleaning (which called for the elimination of corners and dust catchers) have also been achieved by Sears along with increased efficiency.

WASHINGTON POST DISPLAY HOME

OF 1939

Old-world charm in a home as new as tomorrow. A broad hall leads from the simple entrance-way to a beautifully proportioned studio living room in the rear of the house, with the glistening white dome of the Capitol framed in the broad bank of windows. An authentic Swedish farmhouse fireplace is uniquely built into one corner of the room. The vaulted ceiling is paneled with knotty pine and two tiny windows peer down from the mezzanine above. French doors lead to an ample screened porch at the rear where it will afford the maximum privacy and view over the city some two miles distant. Also, on the first floor is a splendid room and bath suitable for any one of several purposes, a spacious dining room with an attractive window bay and a compact, ultra modern kitchen with serving pantry.

Upstairs are two fine master rooms, a child's room, and a crisp black and white tile bath. In the basement, which is virtually another floor, there has been built a gay recreation room with a service bar, a maid's room and bath, and two-car garage, which is entered from the service alley at the rear.

Attention to detail, strict adherence to the best building practices, craftsmanship, and the finest materials are all apparent. From the Gar Wood air-conditioning plant in the basement to the everlasting slate on the roof, we have endeavored to create a home of carefree comfort and charm.

1939 to Bring Increase in Home Building

300,000 New Dwellings Expected to Be Erected During the Year

Chicago.—1939 should bring increased home building with the probability that some 300,000 new dwelling units will be constructed before this time next year, according to the prospectus issued to savings and loan managers by Clarence T. Rice, Kansas City, Kansas, president of the United States Building & Loan League. Increasing real estate sales in a majority of the localities, a slight upward trend in rents, and steadiness in sale price of existing properties were other probabilities outlined, and these conditions were coupled by him with the certainty that there would be a continued abundance of home mortgage money throughout the year.

Mr. Rice said that currently there is an unprecedented mobilization of winter home building to keep up employment and to have small homes ready for spring consumption, thus keeping the usual winter slow-up in building from graining any headway.

"On the whole the country seems set for about a one-third increase in the volume of new residential building, privately financed," he said in the bulletin. "According to the Bureau of Labor statistics about 196,200 dwelling units were built during the first ten months of 1938 and we can expect about 300,000 to go up in the year just ahead. This will mean the largest expenditure for this purpose since 1929, and will undoubtedly include an increasing percentage of multi-family dwellings Many of our savings and loan institutions are already giving serious thought—and some have begun to act—on the idea of increasing the portion of their loans made for multi-family homes. Private enterprise, without deserting its ideal of home ownership, will have to do more in the field of low rental housing if we expect to confine public housing to its proper sphere."

The league official pointed out that the past few months' rise in business has been reflected in the real estate market and that sales began advancing back in the summer. He believes that there will be enough building of new units this year to prevent any serious shortage of houses appearing and to prevent also any noteworthy upturn in the prices for which existing properties will be selling, although such prices are expected to hold their own everywhere and probably rise some in some communities.

Some upward adjustment in the rents of both one-family homes and apartments is seen, following the past several months' failure of rents to do more than hold their own after a slight decline dating from the spring. Undoubling of families resulting from probable continuation of the business revival will do its share to create enough demand for places to live to set rents on the upward trend again, he believes.

That the end of the year 1939 will see an actual increase in the total amount of mortgage indebtedness on residential properties is esteemed a great probability by Mr. Rice. He points out that there has been a steady shrinkage in the amount of such debt ever since the deflation and much of the borrowing of the past three years has been refinancing rather than the incurring of new obligations. Seeing the probability that between $1,800,000,000 and $2,000,000,000 of mortgage loans will be placed on homes by thrift and home financing institutions and other lenders this coming year, and that a majority will represent new rather than old indebtedness the league official said that there will be a net increase of $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 in the total mortgage debt on homes.

"The year will see the largest volume of transfers of real property from institutional ownership to private hands which has taken place probably in this century," said Mr. Rice. "Not until the depression of the '30's was there any appreciable amount of real estate passing into the hands of mortgage lenders during the twentieth century, and the sale of a greater portion of the depression accumulation than in any previous year seems likely for 1939."

Light Paint Gives Illusion of Space

An illusion of increased space would tend to improve the appearance of the majority of dining rooms. This apparent size increase may be accomplished by painting the walls light with the trim of the same color, and the floor and baseboard a darker hue. The result gives an impression of extension to the floor space which surrounds the rug.

Plans for Home Should Include Financing

When planning to build a new home, the prospective owner should know exactly how to finance the project and what special features the house should include. A planning desk in the kitchen is a help to every woman who plans to do her own or ever part of the housework.

Single Family Home Construction in Washington, D. C.

As the chart on the left shows, Washington has had a boom in single family house construction for the past 6 years. This steady increase has been possible only because the houses have been sold almost as fast as they were built.

It is a tribute to the power of Post advertising that, during the 6 years in which this building boom was taking place, The Washington Post has carried a greater volume of real estate display advertising than any other Washington newspaper:

Rejection of Examiner Plan Asked by Road

Missouri Pacific Wants 'Composition' With Its Creditors

The Missouri Pacific Railroad asked the Interstate Commerce Commission Friday to reject an examiner's proposed plan of reorganization for it, and to allow it to effect a "compostion" with its creditors.

"Denial of an opportunity to submit to a vote of its creditors a proposal for compostion will take from the debtor, Missouri Pacific, a right given it by Congress," the railroad said in a brief.

The composition theory, the Missouri Pacific explained, is that an insolvent debtor may make an agreement of compromise with its creditors whereby the creditors relinquish some portion of their rights and the debtor is enabled to retain its property and business.

Under the reorganization plan recommended some time ago by examiner R. H. Jewell, present holders of Missouri Pacific preferred and common stock would have no participation in the reorganized company. The Alleghany Corporation, top holding company in the railroad empire formed by the late Van Sweringen brothers, owns 522,900 shares, or 63 per cent, of Missouri Pacific's common stock and 194,100 shares, or 27 per cent, of the preferred stock.

Under the examiner's proposal, the Alleghany Corporation would receive nothing for its stock, but would receive about $5,000,000 of new common stock for $11,152,000 of convertible 5½ per cent bonds it now holds.

The Missouri Pacific contended that its modified plan of reorganization, which was drastically altered by the examiner, represented an agreement with practically all creditors.

House Group To Study New Armory Here

Appropriation ody May Insert Item in Budget to Buy Site

A new move to give the District National Guard a modern armory will be launched on Capitol Hill this session, it was learned yesterday, and probably will have the indorsement of the House sub-committee on District appropriations.

Members of the sub-committee indicated they would consider inserting in the District budget sufficient funds to purchase a site in southwest Washington. They still are opposed, however, to the site at the south side of East Capitol street near Twenty-first.

Roosevelt Interested

Funds also may be included in the District supply bill to prepare plans, it was intimated.

For 30 years the District National Guard, which is housed in the obsolete National Hotel on Pennsylvania, has been trying to persuade Congress to appropriate funds for a new armory.

Last session President Roosevelt himself took a hand and sent to Capitol Hill a $210,000 deficiency budget estimate after the House had refused to allow funds for purchase of a site. Although approved by the Senate, the item was eliminated from the last deficiency bill in conference.

Object to Houses There

The House sub-committee last year explained its opposition to the East Capitol site on the ground that more than a score of row houses had been built on the tract proposed.

The Public Works Administration last summer considered a request for a PWA loan-grant for the armory, but preference was given the Municipal Center and other local projects.

Artistry Helps French Film Industry Take Home Market From Americans

FORTY MILLION FRENCHMEN can't be bothered—with the costly glitter of the Hollywood system. So their businesslike new movie industry is inexpensive, unspectacular—and productive of some remarkably fine films.

No Fabulous Salaries Paid; No Scandals

Hollywood Being Hit in Pocket As Paris Concocts Own Productions

By Elmer W. Lower.

Paris.

Hollywood minus hokum; movieland without glamour, without super-colossal $1,000,000 productions, without fabulous $5,000-a-week salaries, synthetic romances, publicized divorces, spicy scandals. Directors who help stagehands fix sets; stagehands who comment upon and aid direction. A handful of stars, and over 200 companies producing slightly more than 100 films a year.

Sounds like a press agents' nightmare, but it's France's way of turning out movies—films that are attaining dramatic heights unattained by America's metropolis of mullarkey.

Praise French Films

The French film industry has come of age. Forty million Frenchmen no longer depend upon Hollywood for their cinema entertainment. American critics heap praise upon the few French films that have been released to United States audiences. And—what is probably most important—French production is hitting Hollywood where it hurts most—in the pocketbook.

French films today demand careful attention. They have captured their home market from American interests. They have taken a firm hold on the big European, Near Eastern and North African business. And now they are beginning to invade the United States.

American moviegoers who see French films never suspect how they are made. Visitors to the huge, barnlike studios never suspect that the oft-times crude efforts being made, almost casually, before them can be fashioned into such artistically brilliant productions such as "Mayerling," "Generals Without Buttons," "Carnival in Flanders," "Quai des Brumes" and "Un Carnet de Bal."

No Big Companies

Unlike Hollywood, Paris concocts its celluloid sensations of 90 per cent personal effort and 10 per cent cash. There are no vast companies like Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount or Twentieth Century-Fox. Top feminine stars earn $30,000 a picture; handsome heroes get $15,000. No French producer dares budget a picture for more than $100,000—"quickie" costs in Hollywood.

Why has Paris failed to keep pace with Hollywood? Why does movie organization continue on such a Tom Thumb scale? To answer those questions it is necessary to examine the history of the movie business in France.

Turned to U. S.

The year is 1918. The World War has just ended. To forget the horrors of human slaughter the French people demand entertainment. But there is no film industry in France and the few entrepreneurs with public auditoriums turn to America to fill their order.

Hollywood was nothing like it is today. But American film production was moving forward and eagerly gobbled up all foreign business. David Souhami, soft-spoken producer and distributor who has spent 20 years in the French film business, tells an interesting history of those early years.

"Pantomime was a universal language," he says. "The American silents bearing French sub-titles had a strong appeal to French audiences. American interests did a big business all over Europe in those days. I represented Paramount and we had a regular field day.

Couldn't Compete

"Naturally enough, France could not compete. Hollywood would make a picture for the United States market and to sell it abroad the only additional expense was insertion of sub-titles in another language."

Then came 1929—and talkies. The French people didn't like to hear so much of a foreign language. Box office figures fell. Exhibitors cried for American pictures with more acting and less talking, but they failed to appear. Attendance fell off more and Hollywood moved to keep its foreign market.

Paramount thought the answer was establishing a studio near Paris. Fox and M-G-M imported troupes of foreign actors. After finishing a picture in English, they would do it in French, German and maybe even Italian. This plan flopped almost from the start. The Europeans seemed to lose all their histrionic talents under American direction.

The Paramount scheme did not solve the foreign problem completely, but it might have helped had not the depression forced general reorganization and retrenchment. Occupied with domestic difficulties, Paramount dropped production in France.

That was in 1932 and since then French films produced on French soil have been moving to the fore. In 1932 the ranks of the French movie industry were thin indeed. Actors were few. So were script writers, directors, producers, extras, cameramen.

But the French are artistic. And when home production began to open opportunities to them, they dropped other pursuits and joined the film business. What they lacked in experience they made up for with unrestrained energy and artistry.

Finds Angel

To understand the difference in organization of the 250 French movie companies producing 120 films annually and the three or four major studios of Hollywood, which turn out 550 features a year, one must know how a French film is made. The technique is almost revolutionary, unheard of in Hollywood.

A director—for instance, Marcel Carnet, one of the bright young men of Paris' movies—finds a story, decides to make a picture. He estimates it will cost three or four million francs to produce it—say from $80,000 to $90,000. But he doesn't go to a bank for the money; instead, he finds an "angel"—just as a Broadway producer does—to back the film, or he raises the money among his friends.

He then assembles his staff—cameramen, technicians, script writers—selects his cast. With his curtailed budget, he is almost limited to a single star; supporting players are not so well known, and much less expensive.

Before he turns a camera, he goes to a distributor, and lays down the story, the cast and the budget. "How much will you pay for this " he asks. If the distributor is impressed he may contract for all of France and Northern Africa and guarantee the whole budget. It is not always so easy.

Now Carnet needs a studio. He goes to Pathe or Paramount and rents the use of their sets for five or six weeks, just as one would engage a hotel room, at 6,000 or 7,000 francs a day. The studio owner will build his sets and assemble his film in the studio laboratory—at extra cost. The bill probably will be 10,000 to 20,000 francs a day for 35 or 40 days.

His extras are recruited from the cafes patronized by actors for about $3 a day. Approximately 5,000 of the 6,000 actors in Paris are regularly unemployed, so the task is not difficult. Now he is ready to shoot.

Work Begins Early

Work is usually scheduled to begin at 9 a. m., but so many trivialities occur that would send an American director into hysterics, that shooting rarely gets underway before 2 p. m. Characteristic French slowess, a two-hour luncheon recess, and temperamental stars and lesser lights add to delays.

Understand Artistic Talent

The French are woefully weak on organization. It just doesn't exist and that's why their films have not captured the home market sooner. But in one respect they leave Hollywood far behind. They understand artistic talent and temperament.

"Organization is a great thing," says David Souhami, veteran French producer and distributor, "but you cannot regiment talent like Hollywood and get the best from your artists. If the leading lady diplays her temperament and flies off the stage, we let her go. You can't make her act when she feels that way.

"Nor do we keep script writers cooped up in an office. We don't use either writers, directors or actors because they are under contract. There are no contracts in France except for one picture."

American producers, working abroad, see the lack of organization as definitely handicapping the whole industry. "Until they speed up their operation," says Jack Forrester, young American who has signed Marlene Dietrich for work in Paris studios next spring, "they will continue to reap decreased profits."

Have Little Glamour

French movie stars have little of the glamour that surrounds Hollywood's kings and queens. Top-ranking players live in comfortable apartment hotels instead of $100,000 mansions; they have one car, not a half-dozen; one or two servants, not a score, and they live natural lives, unharried by exploiting press agents.

Only a few of the outstanding feminine stars — Dannielle Darrieux, or Annabella—make $90,000 a year, at about $30,000 a picture. Fernandel, the comedian; Jean Gabin, Raimut and Charles Boyer top the list of leading men, at about $15,000 a picture. Directors are as great a box-office attraction as the actors in France. Marcel Carnet, Jean Renoir, Julien Duvivier, G. W. Pabst, Roger Richebe, Abel Gance and Ludwig Berger are among the best.

Custom forces French stars to be democratic on the set, to treat extras and stars alike, but it imposes no regulations on their private lives, as does Hollywood. Press agents ask the principals to do two publicity chores each picture—a cocktail party and an appearance at the premiere. They do not have to perform for publicity schemes, or be part to synthetic "romances" for publicity purposes.

They break all the rules of Hollywood hullabaloo, these French—but they're artists—and their films show it.

This New York

By Lucius Beebe

Informed persons around the town are getting a hearty snicker out of the circumstance that that curious night club which so widely advertised itself as closed to the reporters and photographers, and whose subscribers so smugly announced they would tolerate no publicity (and immediately scrammed out of there for the Stork and El Morocco, where they could be sure of rating press attention) having blown up with a resounding bang, is going to be reopened as a public deadfall and various editors and paragraphers around town are being consulted as to how to make it a go. Even allowing for the fact that most of the original sponsors of these preposterous premises were well beyond the age where the most adroitly wielded camera could conceivably be flattering, the loud fanfares with which they announced that their saloon was going to be, oh so private, made them overnight the town's first comedians. The night after the opening, when to the immense chagrin of the members, no single reporter or cameraman had shown the slightest interest in the proceedings, Mr. Winchell discovered the entire board of directors discussing what to do at the bar at Jack and Charlies, and from that moment on the club was the most humorous floppo of the last two seasons. Now the management of the hotel which owns the place wants to open it as a muzhik trap where all the great public with its lovely, lovely money will be welcome. This department can give them some advice as to how to get away with it. Throw away the name; tear down the building in which it is housed; forbid forever the presence of any of the pretentious phonies originally associated with the dreary dump, set up business on some other site with a new name, new management and new staff and see to it, if it can be arranged, that there is one fashion reporter, one Broadway paragrapher and one photographer present for each paying guest at all times. That's the only thing people in New York go to night clubs for and every other proprietor in the business knows it. People who want anonymity and privacy stay at home where they can give themselves spurious airs without turning the stomachs of the rest of the town.

For a couple of decades now, the camera has threatened the reported and printed word as the paramount news recording device. Its potentialities have been obvious; it was spectacular, instantaneous in its impact on the consciousness of the beholder and it was graphic to folk who could neither read nor write. But the essential editorial mendacity of photographic reporting will, in the end, be its undoing and already there are visible signs and portents that the camera, as a dominant news device, isn't here to stay. The editors of Life magazine, than whom there are none more astute, have begun to see the defects of photography as an authentic record and are now employing the old-time sketch artist to supplement their camera record, and its drachmas to obols that other picture-record magazines and even newspapers will follow their lead. Contrary, of course, to the aphorism that "the camera never lies," the camera is always and inevitably a liar. It records the unessential with all the amphasis it lends to things that are important and its record is always instantaneous and incomplete. It can flatter people and it can abuse them, often enough without the volition of the cameraman. Take a shot of Albert Einstein at the split-second moment when his eyes are closed and his mouth open and he looks like a Belamite. Get Gargantua, the circus ape, in a happy interlude and he's lovelier than Mr. Clark Gable. The camera can make Mrs. Harrison Williams

John Payne Hollywood Choice to Fill Dick Powell's Singing Roles; Of Virginia Ancestry, He Was Studying Opera When Movies Called

Associated Press Staff Correspondent.

Hollywood, Calif., Jan. 14.—To use John Payne's pet phrase, "So help me Hanna," he is the best bet in Hollywood to fill Dick Powell's shoes, and singing roles.

For the uninitiated, Payne is a handsome chap of 28 years with a social register background, a sports record to fit his athlete's physique, a flair for writing short stories and a wife named Anne Shirley, who also does real well in the movies.

Payne also is the determined young man who was signed to a contract off his stage and radio work in the East and then spent two years trying to get some real reel work.

Lands With Warners

John didn't particularly like backing up to the cashier's window for his $450 a week (he hadn't the heart to face the paymaster), so he argued his way out of one studio into another and then into Warner Brothers, where he got the chance to be the singing orchestra leader who rose to fame in "The Garden of the Moon."

And he has the man he likely will succeed to thank for this chance, because Powell is weary of those singing roles and wants to be a thespian in the dramaic sense of the word. Dick said he didn't like the Garden of the Moon role, but job-hungry John Payne did.

No sooner had Payne finished that, than the studio set him to work in "Wings of the Navy." Possibly his success as a singing actor was responsible for the fact that John warbles nary a tune in this production about to be released; but studio officials still have his musical talents very much in mind.

Learns Lesson

All this activity came only after Payne learned a lesson or two about Hollywood.

"So help me Hanna," he said, "If I didn't get under the feet of more directors in those studios in those first two years. I didn't know much about pictures and wanted to learn. Then, too, I figured if everyone knew me by name, they'd remember me when a part was available.

"It took me those two years to find out that if you're hard to find, you'll get your chance a lot sooner. That wouldn't work anywhere in the world but in Hollywood."

The fact that Payne's ancestry rates back to one of the first families in Virginia came to light when he started investing a portion of his screen earnings in the old family plantation near Roanoke.

Charles B. Driscoll

Pages From a Journalist's Diary

New York.—Diary: That young John Hess, who has a baby only a few weeks old and three dogs, finally succeeded in selling me a new car. . . . I told him how I had smashed up two cars by skidding on icy roads, so he sold me trick tires that aren't supposed to skid, for some extra money . . . Fine, but still I don't fell anxious to drive the new car around in icy weather . . . A gallon of gleaming ribbon-cane syrup from my old friend, the Secretary of Agriculture of Louisiana. My wife, a neighborly soul, shares it with Mrs. Pegues, on the next street. Dr. Albert Pegues, professor of English, comes from North Carolina and Texas. His eyes shine when he scents real Southern syrup . . . Chatting with Mike Hughes, the patrolman on our beat, I learn that Killer Monk the police dog that nearly murdered our Capt Kidd, is acquiring a bad reputation, and may be disciplined by police order.

This winter is a notable one for very severe colds, often running into pneumonia, in New York. Among my personal friends, Fred Knowles, Jed Kiley, Frank Markey, Bill Lengel, Frazier Hunt, Bob McNitt, Rennie McEvoy, Mrs. McEvoy and Dr. Thompson Sweeney have all suffered severely within a month. The cold seems much more virulent than the ones we used to know, and yet is hardly the influenza that hit the town during the World War and many times since. I'm having a tussle with it myself now. You'll know what I mean when I say that these typewriter keys have some fiendish magic that causes them to hit my eardrums instead of the paper.

Several have written, rebuking me for permitting Capt. Kidd to go about muzzled while the dog that chewed him up roams the hills unmuzzled. Some few have even intimated that I shouldn't own a dog if I can't protect him.

These well-meaning correspondents don't realize that the Captain wears a muzzle by special order of a police court. He nipped a paper delivery boy, very slightly, a year or so ago, when the boy, crazed by fear, swung his paper bag at him and yelled. I was summoned to court, lectured by kindly Judge Boote. Although I defended the Captain to the best of my ability, I was required thenceforth to muzzle the dog whenever he was at large.

Mike Hughes is a dog-loving policeman, but there are some who would shoot our Captain at sight if he were unmuzzled. The owners of Monk simply refuse to muzzle him. Now what would my kind advisors do in those circumstances?

The Dutch Treat Club, where hundreds of writers, actors, artists and men of allied occupations meet once a week to talk and listen, has missed its genially sarcastic president, Clarence Budington Kelland, during the present winter. Kelland, who has always been head of the club and can't get rid of the office by resigning, went to Arizona. He liked the climate so well that he stayed, built a home, does his writing there.

Kelland communicates with the club by wire and letter, but won't promise when he'll come back and preside at meetings. The presiding job is passed around now. Ray Vir Din, advertising man, and Harry Hansen, book critic, do excellent work, introducing speakers and singers. The job isn't easy. Dutch Treaters feel free to interrupt and heckle the presiding officer when they think he's not doing very well.

Jack Raper, Cleveland humorist, dropped in to visit at my Times Square workshop lately. He had been taking the first rest he's had in the approximately 35 years he's been running a column in a Cleveland newspaper. He and I once occupied the same little office.

Because of a bad cold that wouldn't go away, Jack dropped his work, came to New York. One Sunday he had an appointment to have luneh with the Jake Omanskys at their Park avenue apartment. He arrived at lunch time, to learn that Jake, his old friend and mine, had died suddenly a few minutes earlier. That kind of shock doesn't help one back on one's feet, either.

Elegant manners get more customers for manicure girls than loud talk and splashy make-up. At least it's so in Times Square, according to Frank, the barber. "The girls that talk loud about the beaux they've been out with are kidding themselves, but nobody else," he told me, confidentially, today.

Payne Gets Singing Role

His athletic past was much less of a secret because John likes to discuss sports, and besides, he set a couple of eastern prep school records for the javelin and hammer throw in meets at Princeton. After suffering a pair of ankle fractures in football at Mercersburg Academy, he took up swimming at Roanoke College, Virginia, and Columbia.

He even dabbled a little in professional wrestling at one time. Today he carries the torch for college athletes.

"So help me Hanna, I had a long time to think about the value, if any, of a football career, when those ankles were mending. I'm one of those who contends college football players should get a lot more remuneration than the Carnegie Foundation's reports lead you to believe they get."

No Place for Dogs

Payne's drawing room topics are hardly confined to athletics and the motion picture arts. Get him started on the values of an education in this day of massed degree production and see.

Too many people, in his opinion, try following a pattern. He says, take the movies as an example.

"The movie conception of a leading man," he said with a big grin, "is a handsome chap with a curl in his hair, a pipe clenched in his teeth and two Great Danes on leash.

"So help me Hanna, I can't fill the bill, because I don't enjoy smoking, and I have no place to keep the dogs."

But he does fill the part in one manner, because John's quite a fashion plate.

He's a Fine Shot

John likes hunting, and don't bring up a discussion of guns if you have a dinner engagement, because he's a collector of shooting irons.

No question, he can outshoot any of the horse opera boys in the cinema city, especially with a revolver. While on location at Pensacola, Fla., John collected $17.50 in cash prizes at a shooting gallery. He has a standing challenge out to all comers.

Right now he is sweet on a new .38 calibre special. He bought it because he read somewhere that a man killed an Alaskan kodiak bear with one. He can't wait to find out for himself if it is true.

"So help me Hanna, it has the best balance of any gun I ever owned."

Payne did some short story writing before he answered the cinema call, and he still writes in his spare time, for the pulps, although the earnings are chicken feed now.

But about this singing business. He comes by his talent naturally since his mother was Ida Schaeffer, former Metropolitan Opera Co. singer, and on his father's side he traces kinship to John Howard Payne of "Home Sweet Home" fame.

"So help me Hanna," says John, "I was studying for grand opera when Sam Goldwyn first signed me."

NEW YORK IS FULL OF ESKIMOS

By Weare Holbrook

The typical American success story deals with the small-town boy who goes to the big city and makes good. And there his biographers leave him, resting comfortably on his hothouse laurels. They don't tell us the rest of his story.

Actually, going to the city and making good is half the battle—for when he returns to the small town he has to make good all over again. There may be a few big shots who are welcomed at the depot by a brass band and invited to address the local commercial club. But the average country-bred prodigal is likely to find that his city-gained laurels are without honor in his own bailiwick.

Last winter when I went back to the old home town in Wisconsin, one of the first places I visited was Dan Jinniwick's shoe repair shop, which was also the local newsstand. Dan himself was still at his bench, with his mouth full of shoe pegs. He interrupted his hammering long enough to greet me by name and extend a hand as leathery as his apron. I glanced over the magazine rack full of woodpulp "westerns" and "confessions" that stood by the door.

"You still writin' pieces for the papers?" Dan inquired presently, between thumps of his hammer.

"Oh, yes," I replied, trying to sound nonchalant.

Dan looked at me over the top of his bifocals. "Seems like a pretty light occupation for a fellow your size," he observed.

I agreed that it was, bought a copy of "Appalling Detective Stories" and went our hurriedly. And as I left the shop, I thought of the old cobbler who had been such an unfailing source of inspiration and encouragement to Calvin Coolidge in his younger days. But then, after all, I wasn't Calvin Coolidge.

It is a fact, however, that the folks at home regard us city-dwellers as a bunch of old softies. They may admit that we achieve a certain amount of succes and general recognition, but their private opinion is that we have forfeited our pioneer heritage of sturdy independence in doing so; we have lived so long in an artifical, machine-made environment that we have lost the ability to shift for ourselves. In short, we aren't the men our grandfathers were.

And when we visit our country cousins, they take a secret delight in demonstrating the rigors of the simple life. They imagine us fuming inwardly at the absence of redcaps to carry our luggage, taxicabs to take us from the depot, elevators to transport us up and down stairs, instantaneous hot water and hourly editions of newspapers. They suspect that we are shocked by servants who are treated as members of the family, and neighbors who drop in without telephoning first. And they are happiest when they can produce an old-fashioned blizzard, and say, "Guess you don't get weather like this in New York, eh?"

Now, I admit that after 10 or 15 years of apartment-house life a man loses the knack of shoveling snow, stoking a furnace, lighting a water heater and performing various other tasks that suburban householders take in their stride. They would be hard work for him, and at the first opportunity he would turn them over to someone who specializes in such jobs.

But when it comes to hand-to-hand battle with the elements, he makes the folks on the old homestead look like sissies by comparison. Every time I venture out into the country, I am amazed by the natives' extravagant precautions against the weather. If it is raining, they arm themselves with umbrellas, mackintoshes and galoshes, even for a brief excursion into the back yard. And if it is snowing, their debut beyond the doorsill it attended by as many preliminaries as a polar expedition. They put on knee-high waterproof boots, or overshoes and leggings; they cover their throats with coils of mufflers, and their heads with fur-lined caps that leave nothing exposed but the nose; they fortify their frames—already hermetically sealed in long woolen underwear—with sweaters and extra vests. Then they stuff themselves into overcoats that look as if they had been designed for Dr. Sam Johnson, and stagger out into the snowdrifts.

And what does the city-dweller do in similar circumstances? If it is raining, he turns his coat collar up, drapes a newspaper over his hat and runs for the nearest shelter, leaping puddles and dodging skillfully through speeding traffic. If it is snowing, he buttons up his topcoat, jams his derby down against his ears, and steps a little higher than usual to keep the deeper drifts from creeping into his light oxfords.

His wardrobe remains fundamentally the same, winter and summer, regardless of the temperature. He wears low shoes and lightweight shirts-and-shorts all year round, and his topcoat serves equally well in summer showers and subzero blizzards. Like a true Spartan, he scorns rubbers and umbrellas.

There is a surprising indifference to rubbers and galoshes in a great metropolis. I realized this the first time I ever went to a night club in New York. It was in February; the streets were full of slush, and, as any Middle Westerner would when setting out for a church "sociable" or a lodge meeting, I put on rubbers.

The night club was both exclusive and famous. I had read about it in McIntyre's column long before coming to New York. The doorman grudgingly gave me the once-over as I entered, and his gaze lingered on my feet. The glittering foyer was filled with fur-bearing ladies and long-tailed gentlemen, laughing and chattering. They stared curiously at my feet as I passed. "The sooner I get rid of these rubbers, the better," I said to myself, making for the checkroom.

The checkroom attendant was one of the most beautiful girls I have ever seen, a vision of pink-and-white loveliness, with platinum hair and violet eyes. I handed her my hat and coat apologetically, but when I glanced down at my feet, my courage failed me. To thrust a pair of oversized, mud-stained rubbers into her daintily manicured hands—the idea was unthinkable! I seized my check and followed the headwaiter slinkingly to a ringside table, where I spent the rest of the evening trying to keep my gum-shod feet out of the spotlight.

Since then I never have worn rubbers—even outside a night club. And I am no exception. Walk through any city street in the worst winter weather and you will see hundreds of office workers in their low shoes and light overcoats, enduring hardships that would make an Iowa farmer shudder. They could afford to buy heavier clothing and higher shoes if they wanted to, but they don't want to. They have conditioned themselves in this way of life; a 40-degree drop in temperature means less to them than a 2-point drop in the stock market. And if you see among them an egregious individual trudging along in overshoes, and muffled to the ears, you may be sure that he is a recent arrival from the great open spaces where men are mentholated.

So let the country cousins sniff contemptuously at us for our soft city ways. We know that the old pioneer spirit still lives in us, and we can sniff right back at them. In fact, I am doing a little sniffing this very minute. Not for us the sheepskin windbreaker and multiple-buckled galoshes; we dress up in December as we did in May, and what's more, we—ah-choo!—we thrive odd it. Let others be slaves to the calendar add the thebobetter. We defy the elebents by sibbly igdorigg thebb. We—ah-choo!

Pardodd be while I get a haggerchiff.

a frump and even make Miss Elsa Maxwell look as though she were a part of the scene she's always talking about. Make no mistake about it, the camera as a news device, while it is at the moment perhaps more powerful than words and certainly more palatable to the many, is just as often a liar as it is truthful. It has no editorial judgment. The pen and ink artist can exercise the same discretion in editorializing his material that a trained reporter can, presenting what is essential, discarding the incidental and flavoring with suitable amounts of colors. "Life" is smart enough to see that the sketch artist can apprehend a lot that a photographer can't and is bringing him back into vogue as a reporting medium.

Mrs. George Washington Cavanaugh in a rose-colored velvet chapeau of exactly the size and proportions of Happy Hooligan's tin can . . . Frank Chapman in a conventional black morning tailcoat and striped trousers, thank heaven, after his last year's gag of black trousers and striped coat . . . Marion Cooley, big as life and, of course, urging every one to come to her own parties at the Pierre . . . Bobe Arnst looking almost demure while being filmed for the news reels . . . Howard Taylor in a fawn-colored waist and bright silver Ascot tie . . . Felix Ferry and Peppy D'Albrew in deep converse at the bar . . . Mrs. Orson Munn in a hat sprouting an asparagus patch from the crown . . . Sigourney Thayer, back from travels abroad and circulating again like crazy . . . Baron George Wrangle telling every one about his new job for the New Haven Railroad . . . Jaro Fabry waltzing repeatedly with his own sister . . . Dan Walker, as busy as a biscuit, getting names and news. . . . Jerome Zerbe with his mother who thinks three nights running in a night club would drive her crazy and can't see how Jerome does it . . . Gilbert Miller, who came late and couldn't find a table anywhere . . . An unidentified woman with a hat made out of a frying pan trimmed with ermine . . . Hal Phyfe doing a systematic table to table round . . .

The very next day at an even dressier grange meeting, so far as the masculine element was concerned, but fewer female man haters, much the same chivalry foregathered to help the Lawrence Tibbetts celebrate their wedding anniversary. Noted for its super-elegant buffet, with an immense table laden with everything from cold-smoked eel and bowls of foie gras to sturgeon and pots of hot kidney beans, all of it splashed down in floods of champagne, the Tibbetts' party is always one of the high points of the holiday season and calls out great numbers of musical celebrites as well as the regular Sutton Place carriage trade. Visible at one sweep of the eye were Clara Bell Walsh, the Donald Oenslagers, Harry and Daphne Bull, Maury Paul Dwight Fiske, Herman Sartorius, Peter Arno, Brock and Margaret Pemberton, Patricia Coffin, Jules Bache, splendidly be-monocled and tailed. Tullio Carminati, Russell and Marcia Davenport, Edward and Mrs. Hungerford and John Barbirolli. The party put a climax to the season before the town started melting away to Florida and Hot Springs and contrived to cap with a glittering panache the greatest holiday weeks of urban rowdy-dow in a decade.

ALONG THE BOULEVARDS: The wine served at the most loudly publicized of all the season's debutante parties was a nonvintage champagne of such quality that most of the guests preferred whisky . . . The management of the World's Fair, you'll be fascinated to know, has a "Chief of Protocol" just like the State Department to decide on precedence at the fancier receptions . . . There is a noticeable revival in the night spots of satin-faced lapels on dinner jackets and tail coats, replacing the dark gross-grain so dominant for the last few years . . . There is muttering among New Yorker magazine fans that the opening paragraphs in the "Talk of the Town" department are getting too serious and philosophical instead of being the amiable froth they used to . . . That onetime local society reporter made no hit by remarking to Peter Arno that she enjoyed so much his covers on Collier's . . . The Collier's artist is Jaro Fabry . . . Notable for her terrible mistakes in print, the same onetime word slinger had already made a grand entry at the same party by slipping on a rug and doing an elegant prattfal, to which Mrs. Chet La Roche, standing near by, remarked sweetly: "There you go again, Molly, always falling on your face."

McGoofey's First Reader

By H. I. Phillips.

O, see the winter tourist!

What is the winter tourist doing?

He is looking over a vacation resort folder.

Why is he looking over a V. R. F.?

Because he cannot make up his mind where to go this winter any more than he could any other winter.

Will the vacation resort folder make it easier?

No, it will make it harder.

II

Will the winter tourist soon decide where to go?

Yes.

And will he go there?

No, he will not go there.

Why will he not go there?

Because his wife will veto his selection.

Will she veto it because she does not like the vacation resort he picks?

No, she will veto it just as a matter of principle and tradition.

What do you mean by a matter of principle and tradition?

I mean that wives always think it a mistake to let a husband think he has the brain to decide such an important issue.

Will the husband go to the winter resort chosen by the wife?

Of course not.

So what?

They will compromise on some resort they will both hate.

III

Will they leave right away?

No, they will not leave right away.

Why will they not leave right away?

Because they will have to pack.

Does that take very long?

You would be surprised!

What will they pack?

That is the question that will cause all the arguments and delays.

Isn't it a simple matter to pack for a winter vacation?

It is on paper. And if left to the husband, it would not take an hour.

Why does not the wife leave it to the husband?

It is a matter of precedent or something.

IV

If the husband did the packing what would he do?

He would toss everything into a couple of bags and take a chance.

Wouldn't he forget something?

Sure. He would forget lots of things, but it would be just as well.

Why would it be just as well?

Because it would merely transfer all the scrapping to the winter resort instead of carrying it out at home.

Would there be any advantage in fighting after the arrival instead of before?

Plenty.

Why?

Because scrapping is more enjoyable in a change of climate.

V

Why can not a woman pack as quickly as a man?

She can but she won't.

How does she pack?

By remembering to take everything from the can opener and mousetrap to the riding clothes and phonograph.

Are all the things she packs needed at the winter resort?

It seems so before leaving, but after arriving she realizes that she could have left half the junk home.

How much luggage will the woman take?

All that she owns herself and a couple of bags borrowed from her mother.

VI

Oh, see the man and wife! They look very angry.

Why do they look angry?

They have arrived at the winter resort and are having a terrific row.

Didn't they go to the resort for pleasure?

Yes, but fighting to them is pleasure.

What are they fighting about?

They are fighting because the keys to the trunks can't be found.

Whose fault is that?

That is what they are fighting about.

Who had the keys last?

She says she gave them to him. He says he never saw them.

Which is correct?

Neither. The truth is they were left home on the piano.

Will the fight last long?

It will never end during this particular vacation.

What will they do about the trunks?

They will have to get a locksmith.

Will this cost much?

Oh baby! Did you ever send for one of those winter resort locksmiths?

VII I

Oh, see the purple man!

What makes the man purple?

The trunks have all been opened and he discovers that she forgot to pack the one suit he wanted as soon as they arrived at the winter resort.

What suit was that?

His golf suit. And he has a date to play golf with an old friend in 20 minutes.

What will he do?

He will swear a little bit more and then decide to play in a costume that will make him look like a cross between a polo player, a fisherman and an Alpine guide.

Will he play golf?

No, he will not play golf.

Why not?

Because when he gets out on the first tee he will discover that some porter jumped on his golf bag on the train and broke all his clubs.

VIII

Who have we here?

We have the winter vacationists again. They are now back home.

Why are they back home so soon?

They found out that they were not in shape for a long fight.

They look worse now than when they left for their vacation, do they not?

Much worse.

Why?

Well, you see, they really went away for a nervous breakdown.

So what?

They got it!

Why does not the wife leave a simple matter like packing for a winter vacation to the husband? It is a matter of precedent or something.

Dale Carnegie Says—

While walking through the famous Lauterbrunnen Valley in the Bernese Oberland in Switzerland, I fell in with an Englishman with a rucksack on his back. He was setting out to climb the Breithorn. Mountain climber though he was, he must have been a farmer at heart, for he was thoroughly familiar with the farmers' problems in England.

He told me how cattle in England had been ravaged by the foot and mouth disease; yet strangely enough, this disease had never attacked the cattle in Ireland. This disease doesn't kill cattle. They merely waste away, become thin, give no milk, and are utterly useless. If an English farmer has a cow that has any symptoms of this disease, he is heavily fined unless he reports it at once to the local police. A veterinarian immediately makes a diagnosis; and, if the animal is infected, the news is telegraphed to London. The situation is considered so alarming that it is "put on the wireless," as my English friend expressed it. Not only is the infected animal slaughtered, but every other cow or steer on the farm is also slaughtered to prevent the spread of the infection. Immediately a "stand-still order" is broadcast by radio from London; this means that no cattle within a radius of five miles of the farm are permitted to be moved. In fact, even hunters are not permitteld to walk through the fields within 15 miles of the infected farm for fear of spreading the disease. These vigorous measures have almost stamped out the terrible foot and mouth disease in England.

As a boy on a Missouri farm, I can still remember that one of our most formidable enemies was hog cholera. So I asked the Englishman if England had also conquered hog cholera. He paused a moment and then said: "You must mean swine fever." Then he went on to say that the word "hog" is never used in England. In America, of course, we call the young hogs "pigs." But in England all hogs are called "pigs." As the Englishman put it, "the word hag has no legal standing in England."

I recently noticed an advertisement in the London Times offering a free booklet telling how to raise "Pigs for Profit." Among other things, this booklet told what the proper temperature and ventilation should be in pig houses. Temperature! Ventilation! For pigs? It is to laugh, as the French say. My father used to raise prize winning Duroc Jersey hogs on the banks of the 102 River in northwest Missouri; and the thermometer sometimes dropped to 28 degrees below zero in February and mounted to 105 degrees in July; and, as far as ventilation was concerned, the hog house frequently only had three sides. The fourth was open to the wind, and when a northwester howled down across the frozen planes of Dakota and swept through the hog house, no one worried about ventilation! For pigs? It is to laugh!

Here is a problem that confronts every man every day, in every line of work in the world—except one. That one exception is a lone lighthouse keeper.

The problem is how to handle other people.

I interviewed a man who has had more experience in this than almost any other person I have ever met. He is O. D. O'Neil, assistant superintendent of Fordham Hospital, New York. He spends eight hours a day at it.

This hospital handles about 600 cases a day, and of course there is always some misunderstanding and friction. Mr. O'Neil has outstanding ability in handling people. Mr. O'Neil said the principle he employed most frequently was to talk in the terms of the other person. That is, to explain situations from the other person's point of view.

I asked him for an example. He thought a moment then told me of a woman patient who knew little about hospitals and who wanted to call a doctor to ask some question. She raised up and called to a passing doctor. He did not reply, and sailed on by.

She waited until another doctor passed and called to him. He likewise sailed by.

This happened three or four times. She was hooping mad. At this juncture her husband came. She fumed. Fordham Hospital! A wretched hole! No attention! Only neglect! Her husband stormed in to see Mr. O'Neil. He'd tell him something that'd make his hair smoke. And that was not all. He'd take his wife out and give the hospital a bad name.

Mr. O'Neil listened till the man had his say. Then he asked him if he ever went to a restaurant. Of course, the man answered yes. Then Mr. O'Neil asked him if he ever ate all his bread and butter and beckoned to a waiter. The man said yes.

"Pretty soon your own waiter came with your steak and potatoes and string beans, didn't he?" queried Mr. O'Neil.

The man said yes. Mr. O'Neil explained this was exactly the way with the hospital. Each doctor had a certain number of beds to look after, just as a waiter had a certain number of tables to wait on. The man could understand this simple explanation.

At last came the day for the man to take his wife away from the hospital. He came to Mr. O'Neil's office, grasped his hand and said, "I think this is the best managed hospital I ever saw."

Mr. O'Neil won the man over by talking about a parallel experience. He talked about restaurants and eating. The man understood that; he didn't understand hospitals. Now you can do this, too. Think of it from the other man's point of view. Take some simple, homely illustration the man can understand; show him that fundamentally the two situations are exactly alike. That was the method Abe Lincoln always used. Follow his method. It will get you further than two hours of argument.

Sixty Glorious Years Return to the Stage With Helen Hayes in 'Victoria Regina'

Statistics Are Laid Bare Concerning Modern Classic

Many False Rumors Have Concerned Helen Hayes' Current Vehicle; More About Those 'Ten Best' and the Irony of the Theater

By Nelson B. Bell.

IT SEEMS almost like an ancient day in the theater when Helen Hayes appeared for the first time on any stage in the National Theater in "Victoria Regina" a scant three years ago. The star, the play and the renown of Producer Gilbert Miller have gone on to such heights since then that the length of time seems strangely magnified.

Perhaps the oddest legend that has come out of this distinguished coalition of authorship, cast and producer is that Miss Hayes, on the night of the premiere of what has proved to be one of her most illustrious vehicles, should have thought that she was so inadequate in the role of Britain's beloved queen that it would be best for her to relinquish the part and the play. It was a sincere conviction on the part of Washington's most gifted actress. The unanimously enthusiastic appraisals of "Victoria Regina," and her admirable work in its title role, I think, had something to do with changing Miss Hayes' opinion of her adequacy no later than the Tuesday morning following the Monday night opening. For once, subsequent events proved the critics to have been invincible in their judgment. This is an unaccustomed experience for the critics.

However, that is aside from the point that, as the helpfully remindful Mr. Fred Spooner points out, every celebrated theatrical production gives rise to both fictitious legend and astonishing fact. "Victoria Regina," which has become one of the classics of the American theater in the comparatively short span of its life, has been rumor-producing, record-breaking and history-making.

"Victoria Regina," to begin with, has compiled one of the most extraordinary records of box-office achievement on the road of any attraction taken on tour in recent years. More than any other single offering it has established the indisputable fact that "the road" not only is not dead, but is not even dying. Some of its single night's receipts have been no less than fabulous in any terms familiar to the gentlemen who preside over the theater's commercial ticket wickets. On the crest of this wave of popularity, of course, Helen Hayes has ascended to the position of "first lady" of the native stage. She has been hedged about, nevertheless, in this latest of her professional enterprises by various reports that are as fantastic as they are untrue.

Consort Did Not Play Role of Consort

THERE WAS, for example, that bizarre rumor that on more than one occasion the role of Albert, the Prince Consort, in "Victoria Regina," had been slyly assumed by Charles MacArthur, writing-man and playwright, who, in private life is Miss Hayes' husband: It was a Middle-West columnist, I believe—prompted again by Mr. Spooner—who spread the news that Mr. MacArthur was having himself a time surreptitiously playing the stage role of his wife's husband. This was a canard, pure and simple. Mr. MacArthur is, to be sure, a young man of parts, but not enough parts, one suspects, to have the temerity to attempt to match his helpmeet's supremacy as a mime. Mr. MacArthur, talented as he is, has not yet catalogued himself amongst the Sinclair Lewises, Thornton Wilders and other playwrights who seek to add acting to their list of other accomplishments.

And, insofar as Washington is concerned—and this cannot be placed far beyond the Spooner front doorstep—another fallacy seems to be gaining prevalence. That is that when "Victoria Regina" reopens on the stage of the National Theater tomorrow night the National Capital will be viewing merely a repetition of the fine performance Werner Bateman gave in the role of the Prince Consort on the occasion of the play's first presentation here. Mr. Bateman, as a matter of fact, is a newcomer to local audiences. The role in which he is to be seen for the first time tomorrow night originally was created and played here by Vincent Price.

And then there is the misapprehension concerning Mop. Mop is the pup-dog that serves as one of Queen Victoria's major attachments in the play. It has been bruited about, with that conspicuous injustice that usually attaches to such things, that Mop, the handsome Pomeranian, frequently has slipped in an understudy during the long period of the play's successful tour. Mop has done no such thing. Like the spaniel in Katharine Cornell's "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," Miss Hayes' "Pom" has been a valiant trouper, missing no performance and crying for no quarter.

Possibly the most misleading misrepresentations that have found credence among all the fallacious reports that have sprung up about "Victoria Regina" concern themselves with the actual statistical record of the play. From time to time vagrant satements have found their way into public hearing that "Victoria Regina" has grossed anywhere from one to eight million dollars; that it was given for from 100 to 1,000 performances in New York! That it has been shown in 49 States of the Union!

Mr. Spooner graciously informs me that if the facts have to be konwn, "Victoria Regina" played 516 performances in New York City before taking to the road; that the road tour, which ended last June 25, ran up a total of 324; that the engagement which opened in New York this fall brought the total to 928 and that the present short tour will register the imposing total of 968 when the January 28 performance is played in Pittsburgh.

The play has been seen in 26 States and 50 cities. The tour covered 25,235 miles. To date, the gross receipts have been a shade over $3,000,000.

And on opening night Miss Hayes thought she wasn't good enough!

But there still remains that perplexing business as to how Miss Hayes manages the utterly transition from the early years of Queen Vivtoria's youthful beauty and vivacity to the full-cheeked and aged dowager of the later scenes. Sliced apples, orange skins, dental appliances, rubber contraptions and all manner of other gadgets have been suggested as the direct means by which the star matures from youthfulness to old age and its inevitable toll of rotundity. That remains Miss Hayes' inviolate secret.

"After all," I recall that she said to a roomful of us three years ago, "an actress should be allowed a few secrets from her public." She has kept this one faithfully locked within her bosom through the years. This column still wonders how it is done. And has no immediate hope of ever finding out.

Anent the Critical Point of View

IN VIEW OF LAST WEEK'S revelation of the result of the Film Daily's poll of the critics of the country on the speculative matter of the "Ten Best Pictures of the Year," it seems expedient once again to recall that this particular balloting concerns itself annually only with American productions released during specified months of the year. It is by no means so flexible in its possibilities of striking the popular fancy as many of the other canvasses that place no temporal or national restrictions upon its list of eligibles.

It seemed to one department, which, by some miracle, was able to name eight of the ultimate ten winners on its individual list, that the critical voting reflected a fair and typical cross-section of both professional and lay appraisal.

Most of us who have adopted screen-gazing and playgoing as a profession are, in last analysis, an "average audience," endowed with no superhuman powers of perception and able to analyze the theatrical wares we examine with no greater acumen than anybody else who has made a study of the theater. We lay claims to no unique gifts. We feel, some of us, that the playhouse, primarily, is a place of entertainment, illusion and make-believe. We approach it in that spirit. An offering that assays, in our minds, 80 per cent good and 20 per cent bad is apt to Washington's distinguished contribution to the stage of the living theater, who returns to the National Theater tomorrow night to revive memories of the premiere on the same rostrum of her reigning success, "Victoria Regina." In this vehicle, under the managerial direction of Gilbert Miller, Miss Hayes has achieved the supreme success of a career that has been unfailingly brilliant.

Richard Watts, Jr.

Tribute to Exalted Acting That Elevates Mediocre Plays.

Although ours is essentially a playwright's theater, the current season has been notable chiefly for the excellence of its acting.

I have seen it suggested that it is impossible for players to be better than their plays, but I suspect that such a theory is based on a misapprehension that would make you admire "The Bells" as a drama of some stature if you wanted to accept Sir Henry Irving as an actor of distinction. In fact, there is evidence that the eras of great acting rarely coincide with eras of great playwriting, since eminent performers frequently have a way of preferring vehicles to dramas.

It is true that Mr. Evans in "Hamlet," Mr. Massey in "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," Mr. Morley in "Oscar Wilde," Mr. Dowling in "Here Come the Clowns" and Miss Taylor in "Outward Bound" have permitted us to combine admiration for their plays with enthusiasm for their work. I do not think, however, that it is necessary to approve of "Mamba's Daughters" to realize that Miss Ethel Waters gives a beautiful performance in the leading role or that we must cheer for the merits of "The Primrose Path" and "The Gentle People" if we want to admire the actors playing in them.

Acting Better Than Play

Even in "Oscar Wilde" there is reason to believe that Mr. Morley's performance is superior to the play, although the drama is a considerably more able work than many of the star's admirers are willing to concede.

In the case of Miss Waters, however, there can be no doubt of the superiority of the actress to her vehicle. Indeed, if the writing of the white playwrights had been even half as successful as the acting of their Negro star "Mamba's Daughters" would have been one of the distinguished dramas of the season—a thought that should be chastening to any of those within hearing who are upholders of the Nordic myth.

It is true that Dorothy and Dubose Heywood, who wrote the play, did create the part of the great, tender, slow-witted, iron-fingered Hagar, which enables Miss Waters to perform so movingly. It happens, though, that they merely drew up a sketch of the role and set it down in a routine and commonplace melodrama, while Miss Waters filled in the outline of the character and gave it life, strength and greatness of spirit by her acting, brightening the stage with a quality of tragic grandeur that is nowhere to be found in the dramatization.

The performance of Miss Waters, hitherto chiefly known as a brilliant singer of popular and sometimes dubious songs, may have come as a surprise to those who had never followed her work in concert and musical show with any particular care, but to her great group of admirers it was just what we expected.

Even in her most casual singing there has been a glowing spirit of warm humanity and a richness of feeling that made it almost inevitable that she would be successful in a dramatic role. Now in a melodrama that has moments of intensity but is too often an obviosuly manufactured piece of tear-jerking theatrics she plays with such honesty, sweetness and genuineness of emotion that "Mamba's Daughters" becomes a play worth seeing entirely because of her.

There is another fine performance, that of Miss Georgette Harvey as Mamba, and the other players are excellent. There is likewise an interpolated song by Jerome Kern that isn't as good as it should be. Though "Mamba's Daughters" is a bad play, it deserves to succeed because of Miss Waters. In writing about her on the occasion of my first-night review I even thought up a bright new adjective to use for her performance. It was, and is, "magnificent."

Some Are Less Notable

The achievements of the players in "The Primrose Path" and "The Gentle People" are less notable, but they deserve appreciation. "The Primrose Path" is a comedy based on a popular novel of several years ago, "February Hill," and it deals with the adventures of a mad and rowdy family of inconsiderable morals. It might conceivably have been called "You Can't Take It With You in Tobacco Road," and there are this who see it as a deliciously shocking wonder work. My own belief is that, after you have got on to the trick of the play, which is that all its good people have unconventional morals and all the bad ones conventional ones, "The Primrose Path" becomes just a mild and maudlin and boring as "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," which, in its upside-down way, it insists on resembling.

That, however, does not keep me from admiring the good work of Miss Helen Westley, Miss Betty Field, Miss Betty Garde, Philip Wood and the rest of the actors. Most of the critical admiration has

Thomas Bress, who secured the injunction against holding the patrolmen's examination, because of the college-credits clause, and thereby licked some of the city's ablest legalites, was admitted to the bar only two months ago.

The Modern Industrial Bank, which has six branch offices in New York, held its annual stockholder's meeting . . . The president issued the annual report, comparing the increase of deposits, loans and profits as against similar items for the previous years . . . The stockholders asked pertinent questions and received satisfactory answers . . . A few minutes before the meeting was concluded, the bank's president arose and announced: "Gentlemen, let us all give thanks for the fact that we're holding this meeting without fear of secret police and that our stockholders can vote howsoever they wish. In other words, gentlemen, thank God for Democracy."

During the filming of "Gunga Din" cameramen made 50 still-photos of Cary Grant, Victor McLaglen and Douglas Fairbanks jr., while they were on location . . . Grant, whose contract calls for star billing as well as approval of photo-exploitation matter, exercised his right to see these pictures before they were released . . . They were sent to his home and returned—torn in half . . . All these photos showing McLaglen standing to Grant's left, and Fairbanks to his right. New photos had to be made showing Grant standing at the left. Otherwise the caption of necessity could not mention Grant's name first—and this, he decided, was not in keeping with his status as a star.

"Lou Clayton, Jimmy Durante's manager, is very sad," a publisher relates at the Kit Kat. "M.-G.-M. wanted Durante for the new Ben Hecht picture and offered $50,000. Jimmy is set to appear in the new Wiman musical, so M.-G.-M. offered Wiman $20,000 to postpone the rehearsals, so Jimmy could make the picture. Wiman wanted $100,000, and the deal was off." . . . "Producers now are reading an anti-war play called 'Yesterday's Tomorrow,' by Ves Ilgood," a play-broker confides at El Morocco. "As a matter of fact, 'Ves Ilgood' really is Dorothy Hall, the star." . . . "The League of American Writers," an editor relates at Jimmy Kelly's, "will invite three book reviewers to its next meeting—to answer attacks by some of the authors." . . . "Bert Fish, the United States minister to Egypt, was in here," the proprietor states at the Game Cock. "He's written a song, and he and I sang it together, for the first time. It's called 'Night on the Nile.'"

NEED. Gypsy Rose Lee entertained at the Royal Palm Club in Miami New Year's Eve . . . A ringside sent her a note asking Gypsy to join his table later and reminding that he knew her many years ago when she played at Hialeah . . . Gypsy joined the table, and the man placed a $50 bill into her hand

A Great Artiste Speaks Briefly To Her Public

Maude Adams Recalls Past Before Sympathetic New York Audience

By Mary Elizabeth Plummer.

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—"It was my first visit to London. I took a longish ride in a hansome cab—it was as long ago as that."

With these words Maude Adams, 66 last November, dipped back into the past to tell of her first meeting with Sir James Barrie, creator of "Peter Pan," the play that made her America's best-loved actress in the early 1900's.

". . . it was as long ago as that," but the actress' erect carriage and infectious humor, as she related incidents from her life to the first New York audience she has faced from a stage in 20 years, gave no sign of the passage of time.

"Barrie came downstairs with his dog," she continued after describing her arrival at the house.

"He said, 'Would you like to see us wrestle?'

"So he and the dog started a bout.

"He was just as I thought he would be. Even the wrestling seemed quite in order. It seemed there had never been a time when I had not know him."

Miss Adams, the star more than three decades ago of "The Little Minister," "L'aiglon" and "Quality Street," the woman who delighted audiences later in "What Every Woman Knows" and Rostand's "Chanticler," has removed herself completely in recent years from the fanfare of Broadway.

When in New York, she has lived an austerely quiet life, and seldom if ever in the last two decades has given the city a glimpse in restrospect of her life as an actress.

But to members of Town Hall, many of whom, as children, whispered warnings over the footlights when Peter Pan was in danger, she spoke freely of "my mother, Mr. Sothern, Mr. Drew, Mr. Charles Frohman."

Her prepared script had been missent. There was a five-minute wait after she was introduced before she came out smiling, with a bow and curtsy.

She wore an attractive beige street ensemble of no particular period in style, much longer than the current fashion — apparently chosen, just because it pleased her. Her beige toque was trimmed with black, and a black veil circled her throat.

She seldom glanced at the script before her.

"I should like to talk to you for a little while about the theater. Why an actor loves his calling."

She told merrily how "my mother

On Academy Awards That Will, and Will Not, Be Made.

Hollywood, Calif., Jan. 14.—Hollywood, like a newspaper, is a world of the present. The world of celluloid lives for the moment—the past is forgotten and the future goes unheeded. What happened last year or last week is relegated to ancient history. And living for the present brings me right down to the annual awards of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, which everybody is talking about.

They're for the best stars, picture and supporting performances of the year and so on down the line. But not a word of praise is whispered about the men and women who have fought through the years and contributed the most to the screen medium; men and women who have given their lives to the motion picture business. It might be a worthy idea for the academy to lend a little thought along this line before the shiny statuettes are hauled out of their hiding places and handed to the crop of 1938 screen champions.

The Disneys, Selznicks, Zanucks, Mayers, Schenks, Warners, Goldwyns, Wangers and De Milles have done fine work during the last years. But what about D. W. Griffith, who trained most of the present-day big directors, gave us the first feature length pictures, the close-up and other things too numerous to mention? Have we honored him and given him a place in our daily lives? Every little while when somebody needs some special publicity for themselves, Griffith's name is dragged out, and the plans they've made for him are shouted about, but we don't see him. Here's a story about him I'd like to pass on.

Where Does "D. W." Live?

Ten years ago in Azusa 18-year-old Harold Emberton, who had hitch-hiked his way from Iowa, found a job carrying water to a rock-crushing machine for which he got a dollar a day. While pouring the water into the crusher he got one arm caught. Trying to get out, he naturally used the other and lost both arms. A reporter I know from a local paper went out to see him and there he was, wrapped up with both arms off at the shoulder. My friend wrote the story and the boy's worry throughout his agony was about his mother. He was asked what he would like for Christmas.

"I'd like my mother taken care of first," he replied. "And before this accident I was looking forward to buying a pair of boxing gloves. I'd still like them."

Well, the story of the armless boy who wanted boxing gloves for Christmas brought all kinds of presents from stars and local people. But one day D. W. Griffith phoned and wanted to see the man who'd written the story. The reporter called and Mr. Griff handed him a blank check which he had already signed, on condition that his name would never be mentioned. He wanted to know what the boy needed most. Naturally, the answer was "Arms." But, having no stubs to fasten them to, those specially made ones would be very expensive. Griffith's answer was, "Have them made."

They cost $3,800. And now Mr. Emberton is running a little store in Azusa and is probably doing more with his hands and arms than you and I. But as for Griffith, I'll bet there aren't ten people in Hollywood today who know where he lives.

True, last year we did a little honor to Mack Sennett, whose training has made some of the greatest stars in pictures. Why, even Carole Lombard publicly thanked him for the things she learned while she was a bathing beauty. Yes—we honored him, but not with a job.

There are some things in motion pictures which have never been sung about. For one, the daring producer or star who's bold enough to leap from the beaten bath into something new while tradition shouts: "That's suicide."

Off Beaten Paths

Selznick and Carole Lombard put their heads together and decided on something that still has the whole town talking. They switched Carole from comedy to a serious part in "Made for Each Other" and took Carole right back to her own beginning—even her name. In the picture she's Jane, not Carole. Selznick also gave us "A Star Is Born" when others refused to touch a story about Hollywood.

Most of the New York critics have chosen English pictures for their award. Why? Because they, too, have gone outside the beaten bath. "Pygmalion," not only because it's different, but because it has something in it for every stratum of human life. The bits are done as well as the star parts. For instance, the girl's father is so vital, and he's a counterpart of millions of the same type throughout the world.

Don't you always, when you read a fascinating novel, picture yourself as one of the characters? Sure, you you; and for days after you've finished it you try to pattern yourself after it. Well, that's what we world-weary people want to bring into our private lives.

"The Citadel," the story of a man's life and soul, makes man's weaknesses and strength so understandable that we gloried in it. King Vidor, who directed the picture in England, told me that everything there is concentrated in one picture. The attention of the producer isn't scattered. Nothing else exists except that one job. You're not concerned about what's g'oing on in the next stage.

You don't give a darn whether Tillie Glutz, as Salome, is cutting off John the Baptist's head on the next set—'cause there is no next set—it's all yours. Of course, we can't very well do that here. Each studio has its own quota of pictures to get out and, come hell or high water, they've got to keep that schedule.

But with the world in such turmoil at this moment, it isn't a com-

A Film Hero Must Fulfill Wide Demands

Athletic Prowess Added To Adonis Qualities, Once Prime Essential

By Carlisle Jones.

Hollywood, Calif., Jan. 14.—The days when any young man who was decorative in a drawing room could become a motion picture star are gone. Young men who seek a place in the Hollywood limelight now must be able to do things and willing to learn to do more.

They need to know how to fight and they should know—or learn—how to swim and drive, ride spirited horses, climb trees and mountains, "walk a log" in a river, take part in a brawl without killing any one or getting killed, use firearms of all descriptions, drive automobiles, speed boats, airplanes and mules, fight fires or wildcats, make love, play tennis, football or billiards or chop down trees.

The young men coming up in the profession now are all well equipped for physical activities in which they can take a creditable part if not excel. Wayne Morris, in the two brief years of his career, has learned to fight like a professional, has plunged from a great height into cold rivers, has taken part in family and barroom brawls, in short, has proved himself an able, two-fisted "he man" in most of his pictures.

Payne Also Can Sing

John Payne can fight—he did it professionally for a time—wrestle, play football and basketball, is an expert swimmer, as he was called upon to prove in "Wings of the Navy," and he also can sing. He is decorative in a drawing room or on a dance floor, too, but it is his ability to do more strenuous things that makes him one of the most promising of the new stars on the Warner Brothers roster.

John Garfield surprised his Hollywood admirers by proving himself an expert lightweight fighter in his newest picture, "They Made Me a Criminal," and it was learned then that he had been an amateur boxer of some note. In pictures he has made since coming to Hollywood he has had to swim long distances, to fight, to drive a careening car around sharp turns, to handle several kinds of firearms in an expert way and to pick dates like a professional fruit picker in the gnats and heat of Indio, Calif.

Trained as Piano Mover

Jeffrey Lynn, whose work in "Four Daughters" attracted much attention, is an excellent athlete, ran the 880 for Bates College, plays basketball and baseball, and can sail a boat, is a demon on skates, an expert swimmer and earned money one summer as a piano mover. He

News and Gossip of Events in the Theater, With Roster of the Week's Attractions

Hay's Comedy Boasts Unique "Mixed" Cast

"Bachelor Born," Coming To National Next Week Merges the Continents

Although "Bachelor Born," Ian Hay's comedy coming to the National Theater next week, is a comedy of English public school life, it numbers in its cast several American actors. Even more remarkable is the fact that the accents of the American actors seem to blend with those of the English members. Perhaps this is due to the fact that three of the Americans made their stage debuts in London, while four of the Englishmen received their first bravos in the United States.

Donkin, the fatherly housemaster, whose interest in the daughters of a dead sweetheart leads to complications, is played by Edward Fielding, a native New Yorker, who was graduated from Pennsylvania State College. To while away his time acting as chaperon abroad for a sister who was taking singing lessons, Fielding joined Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree's company.

Jane Sterling makes her Broadway debut as one of the three girls whose presence at the boys' school causes all the commotion. As a side trip between commuting between New York and South America, she went to London to study at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art. Her first Broadway job she owes to the fact that she resembles the girl who plays Chris in the original London company of "Bachelor Born."

Stephen Ker-Appleby heads the London-to-New York contingent. He is an actor because his family thought that a trip to America would cure his love for boxing. He won the amateur heavyweight championship in England, a feat not fully appreciated by the other members of the Ker-Appleby clan. They sent him here hoping that "some barbarian would make him forget his ring career." In Palm Beach he joined a stock company; then he appeared in Shubert shows, plus "Valley Forge" and "Jane Eyre," for the Theater Guild. He also has been seen in "Pride and Prejudice," "St. Helena" and "The County Wife," but has not as yet set foot upon an English stage.

Virginia Barton was born in Australia. She visited London and tried to get on the stage there. Lacking experience, the best she got was a job with a stock company sailing for Canada. She then appeared in pictures, and finally made her American stage debut in the leading role of the Chicago company of "The Night of January 16." "Bachelor Born" is her first Broadway play.

Bertram Tanswell came from London to visit his sister in Iowa. He enrolled at the State University and concentrated on dramatics. During the Chicago World's Fair he acted with the company that introduced streamlined Shakespeare to the Midwest. Then he returned to England to join a repertory company, returned to America and joined the Caravan Theater.

Morgan Puts on Magic for 'Wizard'

Frank Morgan visited the "Wizard of Oz" set for the first time yesterday. The comedian, who will play the title role, arrived with a box of trick flowers, flags, and other magic paraphernalia to demonstrate to Director Victor Fleming the "magic act" he will perform in the picture. He has been practicing with his "gimmicks" for the past three weeks.

receive a bit of an accolade. After all, what profit is it to anyone concerned to accentuate the frailty of the 20 per cent and ignore the preponderance of the attraction's virtues?

Are all of the novels you read classics? Does your motor car run perfectly at all times? Do your garments always fit you with the perfection you might wish? Is every morsel of food you place in your mouth a gastronomical masterpiece?

Then why should every play or picture you see be the epitome of an inspired perfection?

It seems not quite to make sense.

Enthusiasm Is Its Own Undoing

WITH ALL of the manifold merits of the piece, one of the ironies of the theater asserted itself at the National last week in conjunction with the presentation of Noel Coward's revue, "Set to Music," starring Beatrice Lillie, prior to its Broadway engagement.

One of the outstanding features of Monday night's performance found expression in the tap dance of Bronson Dudley, son of Bide Dudley, celebrated critic, theatrical commentator, playwright and radio artist. So enthusiastic was Mr. Dudley to perfect his work, and add further luster to a personal contribution that already was superlative, that on Tuesday afternoon, in a moment of relaxation, he sought to demonstrate to Mr. Coward some of the new steps that might increase the artistry of his single solo dance. In this gratuitous and friendly exposition of the far reaches of his pedal precocity, Mr. Dudley sustained a sprained ankle that kept him off the stage for approximately the remainder of the week.

I once saw a youth fall out of a tree and break his arm in a mere attempt to show some of us innocent bystanders how another youngster, a few moments before, had fallen out of a tree and broken his arm!

Life seems to be like that.

. . . Gypsy spurned it, but the man was persistent . . . "Listen," Gypsy told him. "In those Hialeah days, when I had to live in a tourist room over a garage, you didn't offer me any money. But now that I get $1,000 and return fares for two—just for this one night—well, I'll take it. Look." . . . She presented the bill to a collector for a refugee aid fund.

COINCIDENCE: Robert Taylor arrived in New York last week after a train trip from Hollywood . . . In Chicago the Pullman porter called him aside, proffered a watch and said: "Mr. Taylor, I want you to look at this." . . . The film star studied the watch and noticed that on the face the letters "R-O-B-E-R-T T-A-Y-L-O-R" had been substituted for the hour numerals . . . "How thoughtful of you," said Taylor, starting to pocket the watch . . . "Thoughtful, my eye, and gimme that," the porter informed. "My name's also Robert Taylor."

DRAMA DEPARTMENT: Sylvia Sidney, rehearsing for her role in "The Gentle People," which opened last week, had been receiving instructions from her husband, Luther Adler, who advised: "Concentrate on that last scene; concentrate on it all the time." . . . Miss Sidney concentrated so much that in her sleep she moaned: "The second act, the second act." . . . "No, no," her husband corrected. "The THIRD act."

MAYOR FRANK HAGUE: The successor to Federal Judge Clark, who rendered the decision against you, won't be named for some weeks. Opposition ranks already are being organized, in the event that the judgeship goes to one of your men . . . AL SMITH: John J. Curtin, who was you. counsel when you were Governor and who represented Jimmy Walker, might have gotten the new Supreme Court, vacancy in Brooklyn—but he's in Florida trying to recuperate from a breakdown.

DRAMATIST GUILD: When Joseph Verner Reed retired from the production of Broadway plays three years ago he made his farewell in a book called "The Curtain Falls" . . . In that book Reed, vowing that he'd never back another Broadway show, attacked a number of prominent theatrical personages. His sharpest comments were reserved for Jane Cowl . . . Well, Reed is back in show business. Not only is he backing Maurice Evans' "Hamlet," but he also is backing Thornton Wilder's "Merchant of Yonkers," starring Jane Cowl.

TRAVEL DEPARTMENT: John Strachey, who was refused the right to enter this country and has been here under bond, is very much saddened these days . . . He can't move, until his appeal is decided. Strachey, whose attempts to come into America were front-paged, just received a letter from his wife—giving him hell for not returning home for Christmas.

"Black and White Revue"

Starting with matinee Sunday, the famed "Ritzie Rockets," all white performers, and "Lucky Sambo," colored entertainers, will offer their "Black and White Revue," which is claimed to measure up to the highest standard set for real burlesque and vaudeville performance. There are 64 members in the combined shows, all being recognized as artists in their respective lines.

The colored part of the program is headed by David, Witty and Jazbo, grotesque rib-tickling comedians with comic devices that are new to patrons of the Gayety. Lulu May Washington, sepia beauty, possessor of a colorful voice of wonderful quality; Three Blue Jackets, a trio of knockabouts, head the cast. The tricks they do with legs, arms and facial expression are a matter of continued surprise; pretty Willa May Lane, volcanic "shake" soubrette, the pride of Harlem's Cotton Club; Jellie Smith, barytone singer of Stephen Foster's never-to-be-forgotten Southern melodies, and the Six Lindy Hoppers, all turn in amazing performances of precision, acrobatic and whirlwind dancing.

The white section contains the popular comics, Fred Binder and Jack Rosen, two of the raciest clowns to hit this city; Nona Martin, exotic dancer; Paddy Cliff, character actor; James X. Francis, Pat Paige, soubrette and others of note.

Record Location Trip

John Litel holds the Hollywood record for a fast location trip—went to Modesto, Calif., to work on "Dodge City" exterior sequences for 3 hours, then climbed into a Hollywood bound train.

Crisp Sales

Donald Crisp has purchased a 20-acre tract in San Fernando valley and will sub-divide it into residential lots.

Marjorie Lawrence Is Symphony's Soloist

Opera Soprano Appears on Program This Afternoon When Dr. Kindler Conducts Work by Gluck, Arenski, d'Indy, Debussy, Wagner

The National Symphony Orchestra gives a concert at 4 o'clock this afternoon in Constitution Hall with Marjorie Lawrence as soprano soloist. The program consists of the Gluck-Mottl Suite No. 1, Arenski's "Variations on a Theme by Chaikovski," two "Nocturnes" by Debussy, and vocal numbers by Miss Lawrence. The following comments on the compositions have been written by the orchestra's conductor.

By Dr. Hans Kindler

Suite No. 1.....Gluck-Mottl

Gluck is one of the great names in the history of music—not only because of the actual beauty of his productions, but because he brought music in general, and opera in particular, back into the great classic paths and out of the baroque style which, if continued, would have made music infinitely less grand and fine and noble and true than it has subsequently become. Before Gluck's reforms, the tendency was all in the direction of entertainment, of a certain technically brilliant superficiality and frivolty. Gluck brought the art back into the paths which, in opera, Monteverdi and, in religious music, Bach had opened up.

Before he succeeded in accomplishing this, however, it came to an open battle between the then enormously popular Piccini and his adherents and the Gluck faction. The issue was fought out in Paris. Curious to say, it was the supposedly frivolous Marie Antoinette who decided the issue in Gluck's favor, not because she had such excellent musical taste, but for the more worldly reason that her rivals at court were at the same time the defenders of of the Italian Piccini, and Gluck was her countryman and had been highly recommended to her by her Austrian relatives. The victory was hard fought and was contested for a long time, but in the end Gluck's greatness was recognized, and the results were immeasurable. I think we can safely say that, without Gluck, Wagner's ideas and ideals would not have taken shape as early and as definitely as they did. Gluck's works and their classic spirit (in the best and fullest sense of the word) acted like tests in the questions of aesthetic right or wrong for Wagner.

From these classic works we will play today a suite arranged by Mottl and consisting of excerpts from "Don Juan," "Iphigenie in Aulis," "Orpheus" and "Armide."

The recitative and aria from Gluck's "Iphigenie in Tauride" will serve to introduce to Washington Miss Marjorie Lawrence, the most sensational acquisition of the Metropolitan Opera in recent years. Her Brunnhilde and, quite recently, the difficult Salome part (Strauss' opera was specially brought back in the repertoire because of this amazing young Australian) have taken the New York critics and cognoscenti by storm. No one less than Lucrezia Bori said to me about her: "She is a flame."

Variations on a Theme by Chaikovski.....Arenski

The variations by Arenski is another of those works by an artist who, although not one of the greatest composers, nevertheless is a master who should not be allowed to sink into undeserved neglect. This particular work is written for strings only, and with such intimate knowledge of the string idiom per se that it becomes a model of its kind in the use of different color within a comparatively restricted medium. The theme is from a Chaikovski song called "The Christ Child Once a Garden Made," and Arenski's variations on this theme were written af tre Chaikovski's tragic death and were dedicated to his memory.

Two Nocturnes.....Debussy

The Debussy "Nocturnes" seem to me to represent all that is most essential in that master of impressionism in music. The first one, "Nuages" (clouds) is typical of the soft, vaporous, elusive subject matter, which no one has been able to approximate so closely in tones as Debussy. At the same time it has all the dream-like, tender quality of clouds slowly passing by on a warm summer day, and gradually disappearing, dissolving on the horizon. It is a pirfect mood-picture of utmost delicacy and subtle beauty.

In contrast, "Fetes" is brilliant, brightly hued, exuberant as a carnival's scene. The very start is riotous and established the mood of reckless gaiety, of ever more intensified abandon. The sudden hush in the middle of the piece, followed by the plucked strings and harp chords, then the muted trumpets and woodwinds, the gradual crescendo to a blazing forte is like a musical picture of an enormous carnival crowd, coming from far, far away, nearly ominous in its irresistible determination to be gay at all costs—and furiously so. All this is followed by the inevitable consequence—the reaction, a mood of "the morning after," full of regretably personal Katzenjammer sensations—a few complaining, sick-sounding motives, a cock seems to crow in the distance, reminscences of the crowd-motive far away, disappearing, softer and softer, leaving a curious sense of complete emptiness . . . then . . . nothing.

Brunnhilde's Immolation . . Wagner

Where "Rheingold" is, so to speak, the first and complete project of the "Ring," the "Twilight of the Gods" is its apex, of which, in its turn, the finale is its highest point.

Siegfried, the hero, is treacherously slain—and Brunnhilde, who at first considered herself betrayed by Siegfried, now with his death, realizes the truth and decides to join him as life without him would be empty and futile. It is this final chant of death and dedication of mournful grandeur and heroic, yet despairing love, which Brunnhilde sings prior to her mounting Grane (her favorite horse) and leaping into the flames of Siegfried's blazing funeral pyre. The Rhine maidens re-take possession of the golden ring, which has been the original curse of all who came in contact with it. The Rhine itself overflows, and, with a magnificent conglomeration of all the different themes, the great work (and with it the entire trilogy) comes to its tragic and over-whelming close. Never before nor since has Wagner shown such a magnificent grandeur of inspiration, combined with such mastery of both conception and execution.

Rubinstein Club Recital Tomorrow

The Rubinstein Club, under the direction of Claude Robeson, will give the first concert of its thirty-fifth season tomorrow night in the Willard Hotel ballroom, with Dorothy Baker, of New York, as soprano soloist. Deems Taylor).

Deems Taylor's Popular Suite Presented on New Records

"Through the Looking Glass" Album Offers Music Written and Played by Americans; Brahms Songs For Lieder Fans; Ballet Music for Ballet Maniacs

By Jay Walz.

The Columbia Broadcasting System, taking over control recently of the Columbia Phonograph Co., promised some innovations in recordings. Said promise is already bearing fruit, the first product being an album of American music played by American musicians.

Just why anyone coming into the record field at this late day should have the privilege of making the first discs of Deems Taylor's popular "Through the Looking Glass" suite isn't clear. This appealing music, it seems, should have been albumed long ago. But it hasn't. Which is nice for CBS because it gives that organization excellent opportunity to inaugurate its new program records featuring two of its own men. Mr. Taylor is musical coinsultant for the broadcasting company and Howard Barlow, who conducts the Columbia Symphony Orchestra in this album (set 350), is a conductor for the network.

The suite is as engaging on the records (there are four of them in the set) as it is in the concert hall or over the air—which is to say the discing has been well done.

There are five parts to the suite: 1a. dedication; 1b, "The Garden of Live Flowers;" 3, "Looking Glass Insects;" 4, "The White Knight." Each is a musical setting for corresponding episodes in Lewis Carroll's story; with characteristic charm and originality Taylor puts in music the humor, the fantasy and the appeal of the tale.

Songs by Brahms

A volume of Brahms songs (Victor Album M-522), originally brough: out for the Brahms Song Society, is a "must" for lieder lovers. First, it includes 14 good songs; second, they're sung by Alexander Kipmis, whose ideas about singing songs of this type are as good as his bass voice.

These songs are a far cry from the carefree "liebeslieder" that Musicraft recorded a few months ago—they are pretty serious, the most forceful, the "Vier Ernste Gesange," being the most serious of all. This particular group grows out of Biblical quotations (Ecclesiastes and I Corinthians), and the depth of its philosophical content is further suggested by the fact that they were written in the last year of Brahms' life, when the question of life and death occupied him much of the time.

Kipnis singe these, and the other songs, as you'd like to hear them. They are definitely not concert pieces for him, just lieder. The singing is straight, and I'd say simple, except that singer lieder straight isn't at all simple. He has the fullest co-operation from Gerald Moore, pianist.

For Ballet Fans

Ballet enthusiasts find much to delight them in Columbia's new recording of Tschaikowky's "Swan Lake" (set 349), which the Ballet Russe performed here last November, and also in Victor's "Nights at the Ballet" (set C-30), a potpourri of ballet extracts.

The "Swan Lake" album is four large records of excerpts—enough of them to include a generous helping of lilting melody, as only Tschaikowsky could compose it. Antal Dorati, who must know this ballet backwards, as well as forwards, conducts it, going forward, with the support of the London Philharmonic Orchestra.

A few excerpts from "Swan Lake" are also included in the Victor Album in which Walter Goehr conducts an unnamed orchestra. Other popular ballets: Schumann's "Carnaval," "Les Sylphides" (music from Chopin); Tschaikowsky's "Nutcracker Suite;" Aavel's "Bolero;" Delibes' "Coppelia;" Weber's "Invitation to the Dance;" Strauss' "Blue Danube;" Falla's "Three-Cornered Hat;" Rimski-Korsakov's "Scheherazade," and at least four or five others.

Francis Barnard Sings Tomorrow In Chevy Chase

Francis Barnard, basso, opens the Art of Young America series this week at the Chevy Chase Women's Clubhouse tomorrow evening at 8:15 and in Phillips Memorial Gallery on Wednesday evening at 8:30. The series is designed to sponsor outstanding young American artists. Francis Barnard, who has attained success in Cincinnati with the summer opera and as orchestral soloist, will be heard in the following program: "Bist du bei mir" (Bach), "Maidens All Are Stubborn Creatures" from the "Coffee Cantata" (Bach), "Wher'er You Walk" (Handel), "Wohin" (Schubert), "Abendlied" (Schumann), "Und wussten's die Blumen" (Schumann), Wotans Abschied from "Die Walkuere" (Wagner), "Pilgrim's Song" (Chaikovski), "Evening Prayer" (Musgorski), "None But the Lonely Heart" (Chaikovski), Captain Stratton's Fancy" (Deems Taylor), "Sailor Men" (Jacques Wolfe), "Tally-ho" (Leoni).

Mrs. Dorothy Dorsey Sponsors Program At Constitution Hall

Richard Crooks, tenor, and Kathryn Meisle, contralto, will be presented by Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey in a joint recital on Tuesday evening in Constitution Hall. Both these artists from the Metropolitan Opera are well known in Washington, and their appearance together will give enjoyment to their many admirers.

Mr. Crooks will open the program with three arias by Handel: "Where'er You Walk," from "Semele," "Alma Mia," from "Floridante," and "Sound an Alarm," from "Judas Maccabeus." His other numbers are "E la solita storia," from "L'Arlesiana" (Cilea), "To the Children" (Rakhmaninov), "Songs My Mother Taught Me" (Dvorak), and "Mother of Mine" (Tours).

Miss Meisle's first group consists of an aria from Chaikovski's cantata, "Moskva;" "Homeland Mine" (Grechaninov), "Fussreise," "Verschwiegene Liebe" and "Ich hab' in Penna" (Hugo Wolf). She will also sing the aria, "Ah, mon fils" from Meyerbeer's "Le Prophete," and a final group containing "Night and the Curtains Drawn" (Ferrata), "Dodo" (Paxson), "Chere Nuit" (Bachelet), "Papillons" (Chausson) and "L'amour est un oiseau rebelle" (Bizet).

The recital will close with the duet, "Ai nostri monti," from "Il Trovatore."

Next Sunday afternoon Mrs. Dorsey will present the famous American violinist, Yehudi Menuhin, in his only Washington recital of the season in Constitution Hall. The serious and musicianly program consists of the Brahms G major sonata for violin and piano, Bach's G minor sonata for violin alone, the Mendelssohn concerto, and Paganini's variations on "Di tanti palpiti" in the original edition.

She will be accompanied by Frederick Schauwecker.

Baume will open the program with Busoni's arrangement of Bach's Chorale-Prelude, "In Dir ist Freude." He will also play a Chopin group—Nocturne in D flat, Etudes in G sharp minor and G flat major, Scherzo in B minor—and "Navarra" (Albeniz), "Poeme" and Etude, Op. 8, No. 12 (Skryabin).

Gaspar Cassado, who has been heard here before under the sponsorship of Mrs. Townsend, will play Beethoven's F major Sonata, Op. 17; "Feuille d'Album" (Wagner), "La Fileuse" (Mendelssohn) and a paraphrase of "The Blue Danube" waltz. His accompanist is Hans Horwitz.

Art Notes

For the opening exhibition of the new year the Howard University Gallery of Art presents 41 paintings by the artists known as An American Group, Inc. The exhibition, which has already been shown in several cities was reviewed on this page several months ago when it was shown at Hagerstown, Md.

Most of the painters included in the group are well known to the art world. The paintings are almost all landscapes with figures, many of industrial and urban scenes. Not a few of these artists show a definite left wing point of view but on the whole, there is enough variety to give considerable interest and the exhibition is a serious attempt to show work of quality.

Arnold Blanch's "Outside the City" is certainly one of the most successful of the pictures on view.

Show Figure Studies

Also members of An American Group are the two brothers, Raphael and Moses Soyer, and Isabel Bishop. These three artists are primarily interested in figure study. In the current exhibition Raphael Soyer is represented by a dark and rather intense portrait head, "Gitel," while Moses Soyer shows one of his characteristic figure groups, "The Dancing Lesson." In "Laughing Head" Miss Bishop shows her excellent draughtsmanship, and her interest in depicting a momentary and unposed expression.

William Gropper, whose work was shown at the Little Gallery in Georgetown, last month is represented by an oil, "Strike," painted several years ago.

Th gallery at Howard University has been completely redecorated this year and offers good lighting and adequate space for display. The present exhibition of contemporary American art is only one of a constantly changing program of exhibitions. The directors of the gallery make every effort to present interesting and progressive showings.

The District of Columbia Allocations Gallery, under the Federal Art Project at 816 Independence avenue southwest, announces the opening of a new exhibition on Tuesday afternoon, January 17.

The present exhibition, which includes the work of Melvin Buckner, Ralph Cesar, Carl Nyquist, Bruce Connor, Hugh Collins, Jean Leache, Joseph Goethe and Richard Massoni, will continue through February and will be open to the public from 1 to 5 o'clock on week days and from 10 to 5 o'clock on Saturdays.

Art work by the children of Poland is the offering at the Children's Federal Art Gallery for next month. This exhibition, which is representative of the paintings, drawings and crafts of the schools of Poland, opens Tuesday and will remain on view through February 21.

An anonymous gift of $1,000 has just been contributed to double the prize money in the architectural competition sponsored by the American National Theater and Academy for a festival theater, planned to be built at the College of William and Mary, Williamsburg. Prizes for the competition now total $2,500; first prize, $1,000; second prize, $600; third prize, $400, and five citations of $100 each.

More than 600 architects throughout the United States, from Puerto Rico and even from Hungary, have entered the competition. The competition, which opened November 15, 1938, with the publication of the contest rules in the November issue of the Architectural Record, will close January 31.

"Justice," the 7½-foot bronze, work of Romuald Kraus, which dominates the current exhibition of modern American and European sculpture at the Museum of Modern Art Gallery, is to be shown at the Golden Gate International Exposition in San Francisco, opening February 18. Two other pieces in the show have been selected for the long western trek by Roland J. McKinney, director of the division of American paintings and sculpture of the exposition—Henry Kreis' "Indian Summer" and Helene Sardeau's "Kneeling Figure."

During this final week of the show Charles Stotler will give two lectures, presenting interesting highlights of the sculptors and their works. The first of these is scheduled for Tuesday morning, 11 to 11:30, the final one on Friday, 5:30 to 6 p. m.

Toulouse-Lautrec Exhibition at Phillips Memorial Gallery Opens Season

Display Stresses Beauty of Artist's Line Drawings

By Jane Watson.

The Toulouse-Lautrec exhibition at the Phillips Memorial Gallery stresses the beauty of his line drawing, and shows that his perception was as sensitive as it was keen. It also demonstrates the truism that what matters is not what a person does, but the way in which he does it. To everything that Lautrec did, from posters to portraiture, he applied himself with equal care and zest. All his work bears the imprint of a creative and distinguished artist with exceptional gifts.

The exhibition, which is in the print rooms downstairs, is the first show of the new year at the gallery. It is loaned by the Art Institute of Chicago, which, incidentally, put on the first large Lautrec exhibition in America in 1931. While most of the works are in black and white, there are a number of colored lithographs and posters, two portrait sketches and one canvas entitled "Dance at the Moulin Rouge," which is placed at the head of the stairs on the main floor.

Facing the landing, so that one has to turn and look at it from the foyer below, is an arresting portrait sketch of Aristide Bruant, done on the heavy absorbent cardboard which Lautrec used frequently. The sweeping lines of the figures are silhouetted in black against the unpainted background, a red scarf adding a note of brilliant color. The strong features are outlined in profile and the face is left unpainted. Bruant was the proprietor of Le Mirliton, a Montmartre establishment termed a "Cabaret Artistique," wherein he sang songs of his own composition. Lautrec did four portraits of him for use as posters, all of them dramatic and powerful.

Personality Revealed

People were always of tremendous interest to the artist, and he had an uncanny faculty for revealing personality. This he often achieved with the most sparing use of line and color, as illustrated by the portrait of May Milton, which is included in the exhibition through the courtesy of its owner, Mr. Walter Brewster, of Chicago. This also is done on cardboard and much of the surface is left untouched. The pallid face of the sitter appears under a stiff little black bonnet, topped with what looks like insect antennae, and set off by a patch of turquoise at the back of the head. It is rather hard to believe that this uncompromising looking creature was a dancer!

Lautrec's fondness for introducing striking, often bizarre, color effects was of particular advantage in his poster design. He was a pioneer and master in this field, whose possibilities he realized more fully than anyone before, and perhaps since, his time. The "Troupe of Mademoiselle Eglantine," which is included in the present group, depicts petticoated ladies kicking brown-stockinged legs, and while they doubtless lacked the precision of Mr. Rockefeller's Rockettes, we feel sure that Londoners stampeded the Palace Theater in 1896, when Lautrec's advertisement announced that the girls had arrived from Paris. Another poster shown is a highly decorative bedroom scene which it appears was used not to advertise a French farce, but rather a furniture establishment called "L'Artisan Moderne."

A certain shade of orange was Lautrec's favorite color and a number of women are depicted with carrot tops, sometimes under Floradora hats, or with birdlike decorations as in the portrait of Marcelle Lender, an exquisite achievement in color and composition. This actress was the subject of a whole series of sketches, as was Yvette Guilbert, who is represented in this collection in two black and whites. These are beautiful drawings, but they give only a partial idea of Lautrec's accomplishments in setting down her piquant features and slender form.

A portrait of May Belfort in profile is drawn with sensitivity, while "At the Hanneton," "Opera Box, Faust," and four small heads of men are also renderings of the utmost delicacy. Works with more flowing line are seen in a series which includes "Woman at the Tub," "Woman Asleep," and "Woman Washing," which are among the finest things in the show.

A most unexpected and amusing sketch depicts Lautrec's cousin and staunch friend, Dr. Gabriel de Tapie de Celeyran, goggled and swathed in furs, mounted on an indescribable object which turns out to be one of the first automobiles. This was done in 1896, five years before the artist died. Also shown is the facetious "Invitation to the Cup of Milk," in which the artist holds the mirror up to himself as candidly as he did to his friends, and reveals the short legs which never grew after they were broken in his youth.

Dissipation and hard work killed Lautrec at the age of 37. Had he lived he would now be 76 years old. It is idle to speculate on what he might have accomplished. Certainly he could not have continued the feverish activity of the 15 years during which he produced so staggering an amount of work. This exhibition shows only a fragment of that output, which left us so vivid a record of the Paris of his day. However, one does get a sense of his deftness in setting down impressions with clarity and vigor, the penetration of his character studies, and the skill of his use of color. His flowing lines at times resemble Oriental art, at others his drawings have the fineness of needlepoint. He was a realist, rather than a satirist, but his works frequently have greater impact than those offering more deliberate social comment. He painted what he saw, quite simply and directly. But he saw a great deal.

An exhibition of drypoints and color wood-block prints by Cyrus Le Roy Baldridge will be on view at the United States National Museum through January 29. Born on a farm in New York State, Mr. Baldridge has traveled far from home and led an adventurous and interesting life. After graduating in 1911 from the University of Chicago, he lived for a year or so as a cowpuncher on a Texas ranch. He later spent four years in service overseas during the World War. In that time he continuously drew what he saw, finally publishing his sketches under the title, "I Was There."

Mr. Baldridge has spent some years in the Far East, in China and in Japan, as the subjects of a number of the drypoints in the current exhibition will attest. He has long had a great interest in negro types and in 1927 went to Africa, returning after a year with 300 sketches and water colors. These were later published in a book, which he called, "White Africans and Black."

In the current exhibition the examples of Mr. Baldridge's work are mostly in the medium of drypoint, with six wood-block prints in color. All of Oriental and picturesque foreign subjects, the most interesting is "Peking Pailou," in which a soft lavendar and blue predominates. This group of wood-blocks was done in 1925, a much earlier date than most of the other prints now on exhibition.

In the black and white, "Peking Hawker," there is good drawing and a sense of great dignity in the subject. Mr. Baldridge, nevertheless, is very uneven as an artist and while he may be successful in one drawing he is not fortunate in another. His faces of women in particular are poor and uninteresting. In some papers, too, he verges on the sentimental. Despite his evident interest in drawing people, Mr. Baldridge seems most successful in his landscapes. "Tai Shan, Shantung," for instance, is a strong and interesting composition. He has used an expressive and rather simple treatment of a dramatic subject—the long avenue of steps leading up to a Chinese hillside temple.

El Greco

In the last few years the Phaidon Press has brought out a splendid series of books on different art subjects. The latest volume to appear is the important, "The Paintings of El Greco." Almost entirely devoted to full page illustrations, as is the custom followed in this series, the book contains 232 plates in photogravure with 13 plates in color.

As an introduction, Ludwig Goldscheider has written an excellent essay on the life of Domenico Theotocopuli, called El Greco. By referring constantly, throughout, to the different plates he has added greatly to the reader's interest in both text and illustrations. With an unusually sympathetic approach to his subject, Mr. Goldscheider has written a sensitive and charming account of El Greco, "one of the perfect religious painters of this world." Despite the fact that his introduction is short, he has taken time to give the historical and social background of the Spain of El Greco's day. So much the product of his time, El Greco's art is better understood through knowing of the fanaticism of the Inquisition—the poverty and the pomp of the church—the new sciences and the old mysticism—and of the strange figure of Philip the Second brooding in his great monastic palace, El Escorial.

Greco was born in Crete, and as a young man studied in Venice with the great masters of the sixteenth century. The work of Titian became an influence in his painting. Certainly his early portraits show a Venetian quality, though as Mr. Goldscheider writes, "the construction and the expression of his sacred pictures grew ever more Byzantinian with the years; his increasingly elongated and sinuous forms seem to find their way back to early Gothic illumination." Greco remained in Italy until 1576, when he made the journey to Spain, and to Toledo where he spent most of the remainder of his life. Toledo then, with its great churches was "more ecclesiastical than Rome"—was the very heart of the all-absorbing and fanatical religion of the day. Toledo had at that time 150,000 people, and hundreds of monasteries. The archbishop was, next to the emperor, the most powerful man in Spain.

In this city of dungeons and the fires of the Inquisition, Greco lived, and painted for the church. The Spanish landscape and the dramatic, rocky cliffs of Toledo were seen again and again in the background of his holy pictures. On the walls of San Tome appeared his masterpiece, "The Entombment of Count Orgaz," of which this book contains many reproductions of the beautiful details. His great "Despoiling of Christ," a wall-picture for the vestry of the Cathedral, started a controversy, for the priests objected to the fact that the head of Christ was placed lower in design than those of the soldiers and the people also in the scene.

In his later works Greco turned more and more to an elongation of his forms and to a distortion unusual for those days. Mr. Goldscheider points out that his method of drawing these flame-like and attenuated forms gave rise soon after his death to the legend of El Greco's madness, and in our own time to the story of his possible astigmatism. That he deliberately distorted his drawing to create the mood and effect of a supernatural scene, is quite evident when we consider that he could when the subject required, paint entirely without distortion.

There is great enjoyment to be gained from the splendid reproductions in this book, and Mr. Goldscheider's readable outline. It is an important new record of El Greco's great paintings which should afford pleasure to students and laymen alike.

Naval Board Urges Chain of Well-Equipped Bases for Its Fleet and Air Forces

41 Stations Needed for Equipment

Shore Establishments Behind Requirements Of Planes Authorized, Officers Say

By Barry Sullivan.

Ship and plane bases, essential to the wartime operations of the Navy and a key to its plans for defense of the United States, are becoming increasingly important as international tension heightens and plans are laid to provide immediately the facilities needed by the fleet upon the outbreak of hostilities.

After a careful and exhaustive survey of the strategic position of the country, a naval board, headed by Rear Admiral Arthur J. Hepburn, former commander in chief of the fleet, last week filed a report recommending construction of a chain of bases and the expansion of existing facilities for submarines, destroyers, mines and air bases on the coasts and in the possessions of the United States.

Recommending establishment or expansion of 41 stations, the board said 25 of the bases were needed for use by naval planes and stated that "the need for additional shore-base facilities for aircraft far overshadows that for destroyers, submarines or mines."

Need Shore Facilities

"Existing shore establishments," it was explained, "have failed to keep pace with requirements of the number of planes authorized . . . It is apparent that a comprehensive and extensive building development of shore facilities should be undertaken immediately for the maintenance and operation of planes actually in hand at any given time during the period of increase. It is not too much to say that if all the planes now authorized were in hand by the time action can be taken on this report, they could be operated at only a fraction of their potential value, and they would suffer a large measure of deterioration or obsolescence before adequate shore facilities could be provided."

Governing its decision on air bases and the missions they are expected to perform, the board declared three considerations to be paramount. It stated that "Apart from the question of a two-ocean Navy, it is apparent that the shore maintenance facilities should be capable of supporting the whole fleet, either in the Pacific or the Atlantic."

Other important points were that installation should be able to support the air "operations of the fleet as a whole in its strategical exercises" and placed to permit efficient administration and maximum efficiency so far as freedom from congestion in the air and necessary supplementary activities are concerned.

National Considerations

However, the board emphasized that national rather than sectional or local considerations would have to be given full examination in determining sites for the new stations, both central and auxiliary.

"The location of a base of any sort in any specific port or harbor within continental limits, with a view only to the local defense of such a locality, " it reported, "is not in accord with sound naval policy as applied to the conditions confronting the United States. The development of naval operations has brought it about that area of naval coastal defense must extend from the continental limits to a line many hundred miles to seaward, and over any direction of hostile approach. It is manifest that in the opening stages of hostilities a difference of 100 miles or more along the coast means little in the location of an air base from the strategic point of view.

"If and when hostile operations proceed to closer quarters, and their objective becomes more apparent, every port or harbor physically capable of use as a base in the region menaced would be occupied by tender-based forces.

"To repeat, since this is a point upon which misconception exists, the location of air bases within continental limits should be determined by the requirements of defense over broad regions rather than specific localities, and primarily with a view to the co-ordination of air operations with the operations of the fleet as a whole, both in peace and in war."

Although air bases will be located at widely separated points, if the provisions of the report are carried into effect, the principal flying fields on the East Coast will be built at Quonsett Point, R. I., where a major station with facilities for two carrier groups, two patrol plane squadrons, engine and plane overhauling and docks for carriers would be provided; at Hampton Roads, Va., where installations for two carrier groups (planned to permit expansion to base four carrier groups), four patrol plane squadrons (planned to allow augmentation for use by six squadrons) are needed along with necessary facilities for complete engine and plane overhaul.

The third East Coast base would be near Jacksonville, Fla., where "both operating and strategic considerations" can be obtained to the best advantage. There facilities would be built for two carrier groups which could be expanded for use by four carrier groups. Base equipment for three patrol plane squadrons which could be made to accommodate six such units also would be provided, along with installations for two utility squadrons, complete plane and engine overhauling, berthing of carriers and an outlying patrol plane operating area.

At Coco Solo, C. Z., "a major naval air base already exists," but it is designed primarily "to serve patrol planes permanently stationed there."

"These squadrons," the report said, "are an integral part of the fleet, and have as their main mission operations with the fleet in the defense of the canal. In time of war the number of planes assigned may have to be greatly increased. The importance of this base cannot be overestimated."

Guam Defenseless

Probably the most significant comments were made in regard to the Island of Guam. About it the board said, in part, "Guam is at present practically defenseless against determined attack by any first-class power based in the western Pacific. With adequate air and submarine protection securely based on Guam, the island could be made secure against anything short of a major effort on the part of any probable enemy, an effort, that is to say, on the same order of magnitude that would be required to establish a footing in the Philippines. Supported by a garrison of only moderate strength in comparison to the important military issues involved, with appropriate antiaircraft and coast defense equipment, it seems that such a defense force should be able to hold out to the limit of time that its supplies lasted, a period long enough in ordinary probability for adequate support to arrive."

Three-fold Advantage

If "a strong advanced fleet base" were developed at Guam the advantages gained by the United States, the board found, would be:

"1. Practical immunity of the Philippines against hostile attack in force.

"2. The most favorable conditions that could be brought about for the prosecution of naval operations in the western Pacific, arising from whatever necessity. It would reduce to its simplest possible terms the defense of Hawaii and the continental coast of the United States.

"3. The ability of the fleet to operate with greater freedom in meeting emergency conditions that might arise in the Atlantic."

Dr. Feiker Finds Planning Sessions Is Not Easy Task

Arranging a convention is no simple matter, as Dr. Frederick M. Feiker, organizer of the American Engineering Council Assembly, which met here Thursday, Friday and Saturday, well knows. Behind the three days of entertainment and discussion lies a good half year's work by Dr. Feiker, executive secretary of the A. E. C.

Since late summer he has been sounding out educators, engineers and businessmen for ideas and for possible speakers. He developed a theme for the meeting and selected 14 men, nationally known in their separate fields, to lead the discussions.

Dr. Feiker has organized more than 50 major conventions, ranging from the International Management Conference, held here last fall, to those for the Society for Electrical Development. It was while he was working for the last-named organization that he conceived the idea of the community Christmas tree.

During the course Col. Spaulding will trace the development of the military art and the contributions made to it by different periods in history as well as leaders and countries.

Mrs. Doyle Tells Women They Must Relax at Work

Poise, graciousness and efficiency were stressed as requirements for the successful working woman last week at Chevy Chase Junior College by Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education for the District of Columbia.

Mrs. Doyle told the girls that in her opinion men take to jobs much more naturally and do not labor under the same tenseness as women. Her advice was to follow the masculine example and learn how men are able to do good work and still keep relaxed.

Girls who have special opportunities culturally likewise have special obligations, she said. Before accepting any honorary position that might come to them by virtue of their position in later life, she urged, they should be sure they were qualified to do a good piece of work.

Assembly speaker at the school this week will be Robert Lincoln O'Brien, former chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, whose subject will be "The Economic Outlook." Mr. O'Brien has been a favorite speaker at Chevy Chase for a number of years and this will be his second talk during the present term.

The schedule for midterm examinations has been posted and cramming is the main activity of all Chevy Chase girls. Exams will be held during the week of January 23, and there will be no more campus leaves until they are over.

Girls have received cards of admission to Congress and at some time during the present session each one will make a visit to Capitol Hill to see the legislative body in action. Students of political science will visit the galleries frequently and attend some of the more important committee hearings as part of their required work.

Readers' School Forum

By Helen Drake

Each week this column will present representative answers of Washington citizens to a problem confronting students, parents of students, or teachers of students. Readers are invited to send in questions they'd like answered to The Post Education Editor. Today's question is:

Should spelling be stressed more in high school?

RUTH DIXON, 825 Twenty-first street northwest, junior secretary. "Spelling should be stressed because of its importance in everyday life and because it teaches people to be particular in written material. Many students do not realize that they are spelling words wrong and if the teachers do not keep them conscious of that fact they will make many mistakes later on in life."

MRS. H. A. SEABRIDGE, 834 Tenth street northeast, owner of jewerly shop. "A young person never knows when he will have to know how to spell and if he is not a good speller he will be in many embarrassing positions if ever he has to spell for a job. The use of the dictionary should be impressed on the student and not only because he will know the spelling of the word, but he will also know its definition, derivation, pronunciation, and use. Spelling is also a very important factor in increasing the vocabulary. I believe that students should know how to spell before they reach high school. If the fundamentals are acquired, it is much easier to spell a new word when first heard."

MISS LILLIAN SHAMES, 638 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, private secretary. "In business spelling is very important and many people will judge whether you are educated or illiterate by the way you spell. If you know how to spell your friends and co-workers have a higher regard for you. It is also the basis of real culture and the sign of an educated individual. Accuracy is gained by correct spelling and in this way if you ever have to write legal, scientific, or other terms you can spell them correctly. Many times the meaning of a word can be changed by adding or leaving off of an important letter."

JOHN A. NORMYLE, 721 Eleventh street northwest, piano salesman. "If you cannot spell properly you lose the art of concentration and it hinders you from going into details of further studies. You cannot get the meaning or interpretation of a word by misspelling it. Unless one is a good speller and can express himself intelligibily, he is liable to give the impression of being uneducated. Correct spelling helps in many occupations and is absolutely essential in other positions, mainly in the many professions."

MRS. MARTHA BLADEN, 2103 N. Uhle street, Arlington, Va., manager of printing supplies store. "Not enough time is devoted to spelling and reading today. About 30 years ago the old-fashioned bee was really helpful for students and I think it should be revived so that the students of today can get the benefit from it. By becoming interested in spelling students are only becoming interested in improving themselves. It is very important in everything that is written and is very necessary if one wishes to make a success of himself in this world."

J. C. BEATTY, 1016 H street northwest, barber. "Your education is undone if you do not have the fundamentals of proper spelling. Spelling is the basis of all knowledge and is therefore, essential for any learning as well as in business, and if you don't know how to spell you are considered ignorant."

G. U. Head Will Attend N. Y. Dinner

Affair Scheduled For University Club In That City; to Be Whalen's Guest

The Very Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, S.J., president will represent Georgetown University at a dinner in New York Friday evening, to be given by the University Club in honor of the presidents of various universities affiliated with it. The following day he will attend a luncheon given by Grover H. Whalen, commissioner of the Worlds Fair, whose son, Grover H., jr., is a freshman at Georgetown this year.

Dr. O'Leary was interested in learning from the list of universities to be represented at Friday's dinner that Georgetown is eleventh in point of age. Its 150 years are exceeded by Harvard, Bowdoin, Brown, Columbia, Dickinson, Franklin and Marshall, Princeton, Rutgers, the University of Georgia and Washington and Jefferson. Actually, Georgetown is tied with the University of North Carolina as the seventeenth oldest university in the United States.

An alumni dinner in Providence by the Georgetown Club of Rhode Island on the evening of January 23 is attracting considerable interest in circles here. The dinner is being given in honor of three prominent Georgetown alumni who were elected to office last November. They are Lieut. Gov. James O. McManus of Rhode Island and Representative Harry Sandager and Charles F. Risk.

Representative Sandager graduated from the Foreign Service School in 1922, being a member of its first graduating class. He obtained his A.B. degree from George Washington University. From 1928 he served as a member of the Rhode Island General Assembly, being the Republican floor leader last year.

Representative Risk, who graduated from the law school the same year, served a previous term in Congress was defeated for re-election and was successful again in November. He is one of 15 Georgetown Law School alumni serving in the Seventy-sixth Congress. At the dinner in Providence Dr. Edmund A. Walsh, S.J., vice president of the university and regent of the Foreign Service School will be one of the principal guests. The law school is sending the Rev. Francis E. Lucey, S.J., regent; and Dr. Hugh J. Fegan, assistant dean. Lieut. Gov. McManus is also a graduate of the law school.

Dr. Walsh is serving on the faculty of the National Police Academy which opened its tenth annual session last week under the auspices of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. His subject deals with social problems and social changes in their relation to law enforcement problems.

Speech Courses Stress Results

Early Art Study Benefits Stressed

Announcing new children's art classes at the National Art School, Miss Inez Hogan, director, yesterday stressed the benefits of early training.

"Even if the child does not intend to become an artist, the study of art at the most impressionable age—the grade school and high school periods—develops in the child a faculty for keen observation so necessary for the full appreciation of art," Miss Hogan said.

Classes for children are to be conducted Tuesday and Thursday afternoons in addition to Saturday morning.

Student Forum at Central Discusses War Referendum

Dr. Thomas W. Gosling to Speak At Midyear Commencement February 3; Alumni Honor Three for Service

The Central Student Forum presented a war referendum Friday, with a panel discussion before an upper-class assembly. The question was "Should the Constitution be amended to provide for a war referendum?"

Herbert Benjamin and Phillip Lewis spoke in favor of the proposed amendment and Leon Smith and Betty Michelson opposed it. Bernard Aipher, president, was chairman in the discussion. After the panel members gave their views, a general discussion followed.

At the graduation exercises of the midyear class, February 3, Dr. Thomas W. Gosling, associate superintendent of schools, will speak, and Mrs. Phillip S. Smith, board of education member, will preside.

The school alumni association awarded special certificates of distinction for "service to city and country" to three former Centralites recently. Those honored were Judge Nathan Cayton, of Municipal Court, founder of the Small Claims Court; Lieut. Col. W. E. R. Covell, former Engineer Commissioner in the District of Columbia, and Edwin Hughes, president of the National Association of Music Teachers.

Twelve pupils were added to the second advisory honor roll, and one student, Charles Giese, was the possessor of four A's. The others were Dorothy Cochrane, Dorothy Glaves, James Anderson, Anthony Pararas, Mary Louise Lansdale, Jean Kallio, Alice Kershenbaum, Naryne Hughes, Betty Snider, Shannon Cramer, Helen Canaris and Gunther Zweig.

A Central graduate of '34, Charles C. Collingwood, was named last month as winner of one of four Rhodes scholarships for the Middle Atlantic district.

On January 18, Sam Barranca will present an illustrated talk on "Stamps of Italy and Colonies" at the next meeting of the Stamp Club.

Program preparation for the coming semester is prevalent section business for the next week. When the programs are finished, students will have made out their projected courses of study for the next semester.

The varsity basketball squad that will represent Central will be as follows: David Applebaum, manager; Steve Adams, assistant manager; Bill Edgerton, Henry Baltz, Morris Bisker, Bill Quidley, Donald Storeim, Benny Steiner, Bob Lanzillotti, Slater Clarke, Zello Lagos, Archie Panago, Harry Martin, Louis Apostolakus and Len Sokol.

Ten Tours To Retrace History

Export Line Plans Trips Centers of Ancient Cultures On Mediterranean

From the Occident to the Orient, through the countries bordering the five Mediterranean seas, bridging the epochs of 50 centuries, from gay continental Rivieras and resorts to the antiquity cities of the Nile and the Old Testament scenes of far away Babylon, are a few of the places to be announced this week by the American Export Lines in their Yankee cruise extension tours for 1939. "Ten new inland tours and shore excursions have been added to our main 46-day Mediterranean cruise, with emphasis being put on scenes of history, art, scenery, or a diversity of travel interest," states George C. Gaede, passenger traffic manager of the lines. In the new cruise programs, which are to be operated in co-operation with The American Express Co. and Thos. Cook & Son, schedules have been so arranged as to coincide with our regular fortnightly sailing from New York, allowing 26 sailing day selections for the coming year.

Unique among the tours is a 20-day Italian culture journey where one may visit the scenes where history is repeating itself from the inspirations of early laws and folding Renaissances, intended to bring an academic past into the teeming life of the twentieth century of today. As a special resort tour an 8-day program has been worked out from Marseilles covering the watering places, spas and resorts of both the French and Italian Rivieras, climaxing the tour by a sightseeing program in Genoa.

Notable among the tours will be the 22-day journey of three nations which is to combine the resorts of the French Riviera, Paris and its environs through to the Interlaken districts of Switzerland, with the capital of Lombardy for the twenty-first day, using Milan as the northern point before departure for Genoa. A special eternal Italy tour will cover nine days with Vatican City, Florence and Milan to be the principal objectives from Marseilles. To capitalize on the new popularity of the Adriatic and its Dalmatian resorts, a 14-day Italian-Dalmatian tour will start from Genoa to Venice across the coast to Jugoslavia to include such well-known resorts as Lagosta, Split, Zara and Pola, with Florence and Pisa the principal sightseeing cities enroute to Leghorn.

A special 20-day overland tour through Syria, Lebanon, Turkey and Greece will be featured as the Eastern Old Roman Empire tour, starting at Beirut through the ancient ruins of Baalbek to Damascus, Istanbul, ending at Athens. Since the cruise extension to Piraeus many requests have been made for a longer stay in Greece than given on the main Yankee cruise tour. In the new program a 15-day Greece antiquity journey will take in ancient and modern Greece, the cities of Olympia and Delphi terminating the 15 days at Piraeus after a second sightseeing trip in Athens.

Ancient Phoenicia with the Holy Lands and Egypt will be grouped in a special 18-day excursion, to include certain sections of Syria, Palestine and its Bibical scenes terminating in Cairo and Alexandria, on the fifteenth and eighteenth day. To unite the scenes of the Old and New Testaments with the glamour of the Arabian Nights, a special 17-day tour will start from Beirut, to include the scenes of Syria and the Garden of Eden scenes of Baghdad, Babylon, Kish, the old Samaritan city of Ur of the Chaldees, birthplace of Abraham, with Tiberias starting the New Testament scenes to the Holy Lands.

Curtiss Donated Miami Hotel To Aid Invalids

The birds found Miami first, the only tropical section of continental America, South Florida, on even latitude with Egypt, 500 miles nearer the equator than Los Angeles. After the birds came an army of invalids seeking refuge from the Artic blizzards, pneumonias and the "flu," which make winter in the North perilous to persons of low resistance. Increasing numbers are finding their way to this winter paradise every year.

One of the world's most noted aviation pioneers, the late Glenn Curtiss, conceived the idea that the thousands of invalids annually seeking the protection of this favored spot needed something more than ordinary hotel care and that hundreds of them would appreciate a hostelry where they could receive in addition to the rejuvenating and healing effects of Florida pure air, sunshine, fruits, flowers and other tropical delights, the benefit of such expert care and guidance as have made the Battle Creek Sanitarium a world famous mecca for sick folks and valetudinarians. He accordingly decided to devote to this purpose the unique, luxuriously furnished building which he had erected to be used as a hotel in connection with this great real estate development in northwestern Miami and induced Dr. John Harvey Kellogg, organizer and for more than half a century director of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, to accept this property as a basis for the establishment in Miami of an institution of the Battle Creek type.

Orton Gardens Draw Many Southward

Plantation's Verdure Welcome Relief to Those Tired of Snow

Wilmington, N. C.

Tourists, motoring toward more temperate zones, are finding Orton Plantation gardens, near here, an eye-filling surcease from snow-clad landscapes. For the famed plantation gardens are almost in full bloom now, offering a panorama of flowering beauty unexcelled in the South.

Approximately 50 varieties of white camellias are beginning to bloom in Orton Gardens, and with a continuation of past good weather the last week in January will find the gardens in full bloom, ablaze with color and a profusion of flowering shrubs, the whole framed by ancient gnarled oaks draped with Spanish moss.

Located at Winnabow, N. C., a few miles south of Wilmington, this famous plantation, comprising some 15,000 acres and containing a plantation house declared to be one of the most typical and well preserved anywhere in the South, is attracting an ever increasing number of visitors. For those who are going South from Wilmington, Orton is only four miles out of the direct line of travel from Wilmington to Charleston. An improved sand clay road, which branches off from U. S. Highway 17 at the Brunswick River bridge below Wilmington, takes the motorist through several miles of shaded pine wood flats, broken every few miles by bridges that cross the fresh water creeks from which colonial rice planters usd to get their water, on up to the big eagle gates of the plantation house itself, a gleaming white home founded in 1725 and set amidst a copse of patriarchal oaks, native holly and youpon.

Close by the house are the gardens, containing in addition to the blooming camellias, dozens of varieties of azaleas, most of which bloom in the late spring, beautiful specimens of native holly, youpon, Spanish moss and many other flowers indigenous to the swampy coastal section. From the garden a long shaded walk winds past a reflecting lagoon back to Old King Roger Moore's graveyard, a hallowed spot steeped in ancestral lore.

From the front of the mansion a broad green sweep of lawn slopes easily down to the edge of the Cape Fear River, with the ocean in the immediate background. Nearby stands St. Philip's Church, built in 1729, Russleborough, and the old reservoir for the colonial rice fields. Reminiscent of Civil War days is Sugar Loaf Hill, site of an historic encounter, and crumbling Fort Anderson. And conjuring up memories of the days of the Revolution are the sites of Gov. Tryon's Palace and the ruins of the city of Brunswick. Last, but not least, for lovers of "atmosphere" seeking a touch of the Old South, all the old time darkies and little pickaninnies you want to look at.

The gardens and entire plantation, with the exception of the mansion, are open to the public. A charge of 50 cents per person is made for admission.

Annual Banquet

The twenty-sixth annual banquet of the Washington Passenger Association will be held in the Italian Garden of the Mayflower Hotel on Wednesday at 7 p. m.

Col. Robert S. Henry, assistant to president of the Association of American Railroads, will speak.

Gala Season Starts At Belleair, Fla.

Belleair, Fla.

The first week of the winter season at the Belleview Biltmore has started a gala round of social and sports events at this resort. Fine weather has brought a large number of visitors to Belleair and created increased interest in sports and all outdoor activities.

Golf, always popular on the two championship courses of the Belleview Biltmore, has attracted a steady round of players from sunrise to sunset. Miss Helen Dettweiler, of Washington, D. C., holder of several coveted amateur championships, is here to practise for the winter tournaments. The first of the eight major golf events to be held at Belleair will be the Women's Championship from January 30 to February 2.

Early next week the skeet shooting contests, held there times a week will begin under the auspices of the Belleview Skeet Club, now in its third year.

Swimming is always a popular attraction here. A large number of bathers gather daily at the outdoor swimming pool, adjacent to the hotel. During the morning the hotel orchestra, under the direction of Joe Marinaro, plays in the pavilion at the pool.

gone to Miss Westley, but, with all due respect to her, I would offer most of it to young Miss Field.

It is she who gives the play the tenderness, sweetness and gayety that the authors obviously wanted but were unable to write into their work, and I don't think that her contribution to the play has been properly appreciated. But don't let any one tell you that "The Primrose Path" is shocking.

There has been a tendency to be pretty harsh to "The Gentle People," the new play by Irwin Shaw, the author of "Siege" and the highly admired "Bury the Dead." Where "Bury the Dead" was, I think, overpraised by its admirers, "The Gentle People," the latest production of the Group Theater, is being almost equally overcondemned.

It is a disappointing play, this half comic, half serious fable of two mild old men who revolt against their oppressor and kill him, and it is unfortunately true that its efforts to mix its two moods are frequently unsuccessful. It is also a great shame that even in its virtues "The Gentle People" has a stubborn way of sounding like Clifford Odets, which is not a bad way for a play to sound, but which does not commend its playwright as a creative artist.

Nevertheless, there is much that is excellent about the new work. It has moments of eloquence and true feeling, and there are scenes in it—particularly one in a Russian bath, with the bitterly humorous comment of a sardonic bankrupt serving as a sort of counterpoint to the timorous plotting of the two old men—which, while they do not always work out, invariably reveal a promising dramatic imagination on Mr. Shaw's part.

"The Gentle People" is decidedly an in-and-out show, and, despite a generally good production, the direction isn't always what it should be, but always the acting is exceptionally satisfying. And if you think that the "movies" invariably ruin actors, you should see the excellent performances of Franchot Tone and Miss Sylvia Sidney, who should stay right here with us.

Hotel Plans Innovations At Nassau

British Colonial Opens Tuesday; Bathing Beach Will Be Improved

Nassau, Bahamas, B. W. I.—Many innovations are being planned for the opening of the British Colonial Hotel Tuesday, according to James E. McDonald, managing director, who sailed Thursday with Mrs. McDonald for the season there.

George MacDonald, builder of public utilities and in recent years purchaser of large real estate holdings, who recently paid more than $5,000,000 for a half interest in the hotel and real estate properties of Col. Henry L. Doherty, will take an active part in the management of all the Doherty hotels, which include the Honey-Plaza, Miami-Biltmore, Palm Beach, Biltmore and Whitehall.

The British Colonial bathing beach, a new feature last season, will be improved and new cabanas added. "Conch Chowder" parties will be held there every Friday and the moonlight picnic beach parties will be frequent.

The Sunday evening buffet suppers on the roof-garden where numerous cottagers entertained weekly will be continued, with a Sunday concert program under the stars. Garlands of tiny colored lights throughout the palms add to the spectacular effect of moonlight and ocean for below.

Luncheon will be served this season at the British Colonial swimming pool, if preferred, without extra charge, and a continental breakfast will be served until 11:30 a. m. in the Cocoanut Grove under the palms in the sunshine.

A weekly tennis soiree will be a way of entertaining. The beautiful new Tenaco tennis courts have been illuminating for night tennis and dinner will be served at the adjoining Cocoanut Grove with music. Famous players will perform in exhibition matches.

The opening dinner-dance in the Flamingo Grill will be held January 14, and the first of the cruise night parties will be held on the arrival of the S. S. Britannic, January 17.

German Liners Show Drop in Fares

Figures just compiled by the statistical bureau of the Hamburg-American Line-North German Lloyd, covering the transatlantic, cruise and West Coast fields for 1938, show a slight decrease in fares in comparison with the year 1937. This compilation, according to Hermann Muhlenbrock, passenger traffic manager, who released the figures, indicates a loss of 15 per cent in total transatlantic travel.

The total carryings in 1938 showed that 136,247 travelers chose Hapag-Lloyd ships. Of this number, 8,521 sailed on cruises.

An analysis of the carryings of the various services and of the Hapag-Lloyd routes shows that 60,247 passengers sailed eastbound on transatlantic ships and 64,930 on westbound, i. e., in and out of the port of New York. The carryings to and from the West Coast's ports and Canada, with the addition of the cruise figures, make up the total of 136,247 passengers.

Hollywood, Fla., Activity Is At New Peak

Because There Are More People There Than Usual

Hollywood, Fla.

Members of the winter colony at Hollywood have found more activity here this year than in previous seasons, chiefly because of the added number of guests at the Hollywood Beach Hotel participating in the many activities offered here.

Delegates from every one of the 21 States in which horseracing is conducted, last week attended the sixth midwinter convention of the National Association of State Racing Commissioners. Cuba and Canada also sent representatives, although not members of the association.

Highlight of the many features arranged for the entertainment of these visitors was the dinner and floor show at the Hollywood Beach Hotel sponsored by the Greyhound Racing Association of the State and held on Tuesday evening. Participating in this program were Miami Beach Kennel Club, Frank R. Anderson, president; West Flagler Amusement Corporation, Jacob Sher, president; Biscayne Kennel Club, Robert Knight, president; Hollywood Kennel Club, P. C. Reed, president; Palm Beach Kennel Club, Stockton Bryan, president; West Florida Racing and Athletic Association of Tampa, F. W. Coles, general manager; St. Petersburg Kennel Club, J. E. Brooks, general manager; Jacksonville Kennel Club, W. H. Johnson, president, and Sanford-Orlando Kennel Club, George A. DeCottes, general council.

General American Life Insurance Company of St. Louis, Mo., and the Guardian Life Insurance Company of New York City have held their annual winter meetings at the hotel since the first of the year. The Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company will go into session commencing tomorrow (January 16) for its tenth annual year, and will bring general agents from all sections of the country.

U. S. Merchant Marine Faces '39 Hopefully

Joseph Sheehan Asserts Maritime Board Has Provided Needed Impetus

"1939 should be the best year in our recent history in the matter of achieving progress toward a sound American Merchant Marine."

Such is the opinion of Joseph R. Sheehan, president of the American President Lines, who added:

"The United States Maritime Commission, created by Congress to foster the development and encourage the maintenance of an American Mercant Marine, went into action in April of 1937, and through a well-planned building program has provided the initial impetus necessary to the replacement of the present ocean-going tonnage.

"Thus assured that within a few years our ocean fleets will be equal to those sailing under foreign flags, operators themselves have been able to make long-range plans for their own organizations, and have undertaken on a broad front to encourage American shippers and travelers to support their own merchant ships.

"All that is needed to insure positive success and a really brilliant future for the Merchant Marine is the support which Americans can and will give.

"1939 looms particularly bright for the Pacific Coast where not only essential trade routes across the Pacific and around the world have been revived under the American flag, but where the important shipbuilding industry likewise has been revived. The Maritime Commission's award of two C-3 ships for construction at a San Francisco Bay yard is encouraging indeed.

Opens Office Here

Charles Miller, who has just been made resident general agent for the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad in Washington, has opened an office in the Woodward Building. Mr. Miller has served the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad continuously since 1922, and was located in Philadelphia for 13 years as traveling agent before his recent advancement. He is a native of Iowa, attended Iowa State College and has seen Mexican border service with the Iowa National Guard. Mr. Miller served in France in the famous Rainbow Division and is a member of the American Legion.

does considerable canoeing in "Yes, My Darling Daughter" and does it like the water sports veteran he is.

Eddie Albert is another young man, new to pictures last year, whose qualifications for the job are not his armchair manners. He made a distinct impression in "Brother Rat" and will shortly move his make-up kit from New York to Hollywood under a long-term contract by Warner Brothers.

Albert is a better than average skater, played hockey, fished, sold furniture and clerked in a soda fountain. He has few claims to beauty, but, for that matter, neither have Jimmy Cagney, Humphrey Bogart, Gary Cooper, Bruce Cabot, Paul Muni nor the "Dead End Kids."

These are the men of the younger generation of actors in Hollywood, star material every one, and not a single marcelled "lounge lizard" or "parlor Romeo" in the list.

Mussels Popular Abroad

pliment to offer you and expect you to suffer through "Marie Antoinette," "Marco Polo," "Little Tough Guys in Society," "Kidnaped," "They Made Me a Criminal" and "The Toy Wife."

But not even the Irish can beat the luck of Warner Brothers. Talk about coming events casting their shadows before them! We wonder if their shadow interpreter isn't Manley Hall, who seems to know a great deal about such things? Why, way back in the "Little Caesar" days they released that just as the real Caesars of gangland had broken out in a scarlet fever rash on the front pages of every newspaper.

"Escape From a Chain Gang" started a whole cycle of investigation into those heartless institutions. And they had "The King and the Chorus Girl" finished and waiting for King Edward's abdication. Their latest "Wings of the Navy" is ready now that President Roosevelt is talking back to dictators, and demanding money to bring our naval force up to the highest level of the Nation's history.

Warners even took a bit of the breeze out of "Gone With the Wind" when they rushed "Jezebel." They really seem to have an instinct for putting their finger on the pulse of the public.

Columbia gave us everybody's problem and solved it for us in "You Can't Take It With You." Twentieth-Century did a mammoth job with "Alexander's Ragtime Band," and there should be a special academy award for the mother who saw her son march out of that theater on his way to war. It gripped your throat like a gangster's fist. It was only a flash, but it struck like lightning.

The most important things Metro did were the Hardy series and "Boys Town." The censors seem to have a special grudge against Paramount, for they've ruined some of their best pictures. "Men With Wings" was one of them. They even took out the most vital scenes from "Farewell To Arms" when that was re-issued. Which seems a silly aftermath to a picture that's already been passed and seen by millions.

The same thing was done to Universal's, "All Quiet on the Western Front." And I'd like to give that studio a special award for the way they've handled youth, the most precious thing in the world, in all the Deanna Durbin pictures.

R. K. O. deserves something good, too, for waiting a year to get Jimmy Stewart and team him with Ginger Rogers in "Vivacious Lady." Another one for "The Great Man Votes," with John Barrymore. Walter Wanger's "Blockade" was another picture which stirred us up. But even that ran into so much difficulty that a great deal of the heart was cut out of it. And the publicity it received after its release instead of helping, as it should have done, did just the reverse. Republic got a real foothold through the public's love for one man—Gene Autry.

and I struggled from one one-night stand to another, knowing that acting was the greatest of the arts. It was fortunate, because we had nothing else to sustain us. We were making no money."

She said that "in my youth, there seemed no one to tell us our taste was poor, our senses blunt.

Wise Friend is Needed

"It takes a wise, far-sighted friend to do that. A great painter, John Alexander, did that for me. He began by telling me one day in the Louvre, 'Look only at the best. After awhile all the worthless things will drop away.'"

She told of the gentle wit of Charles Frohman. "One day someone asked him what made 'The Little Minister' such an attractive play, and he replied, 'That man Barrie.'

"Frohman delighted in what he called 'clean plays,'" Miss Adams continued. "He said, 'Make the young man down in the front row wish he could be the hero.'"

She recalled that Mark Twain came to see "Peter Pan" and expressed a wish to play the role of the crocodile. No child ever wanted to play the crocodile.

She recalled Barrie's telling her, "The great trouble with women is that they are generally right."

Backstage afterward, the actress who used to be called affectionately "Mrs. Midget," slipped into a cape-like wrap and told reporters, "No interviews."

Smoke in the audience recalled, as they left, how, as children they sometimes decorated with flowers the carriage that took her home from the theater where "Peter Pan" played in 1906.

Visitors Find Jamaica Is A Paradise

Tropical Land Was Discovered by Columbus in 1492 Searching for Gold

Jamaica offers the visitors an epitome of all West Indian attractions. There is every summer sport, including polo, golf and racing at Knutsford Park. For instance, among exciting things to do is gliding over the rapids on Rio Grande on a bamboo raft piloted by a skilled steel-nerved native.

Columbus discovered Jamaica in 1494 in search of gold. He did not find any but discovered instead the veritable paradise the visitor delights in today: Incredible tropical luxury of vegetation (there are hundreds of varieties of orchids alone!), wild color and scenic beauty in valley, river and mountain. Much of the jungle and mountain is unexplored and it is not hard to believe that pirate loot still lies hidden somewhere in their fastnesses.

Jamaica can be comfortably discovered by car over 4,000 miles of good roads, and also by 210 miles of rather leisurely railway. A tour through the island brings one to great sugar estates, banana plantations, groves of cocoanut and citrus fruits, coffee estates (especially fine in the Blue Mountains).

Kingston Is Largest City

Kingston is the largest and most modern city in the British West Indies, with one of the finest harbours in the world. Shopping for English goods is not the least of its attractions to northern visitors.

The Hope Botanical Gardens provide a convenient exhibition of Jamaica's tropical treasures. Kingston's night life includes Jamaica rum, drinks at "Charley's Punch Bowl" and a cabaret show at the "Glass Bucket."

A short tour from the city enables a visit to Spanish Town, the old capital, with the oldest cathedral in the British colonies and its memorial to Admiral Rodney; the Rio Cobre Gorge and Bog Walk; Fern Gully, Roaring River Falls. On farther afield, a bath in warm surf at pretty Dunn's River and a natural cold fresh water shower on the rocks; the "Dude Ranch" at Good Hope where the cowboys can rope a steer, break a bronco or climb a coco palm for nuts! Newcastle nestles 4,000 feet up in the superb Blue Mountains.

Richest Spot in Universe

The Harbour road, past the airport, along the Palisades, brings one to what is left of old Port Royal—in pirate days termed "the wickedest city on earth." Port Royal has hard history; this "richest spot in the universe" was overwhelmed by an earthquake in 1692, destroyed by fire in 1702 and again in 1816, while in 1722 a hurricane devasted it. Today only its ruins are left. Nelson commanded Fort Charles here in 1779; his "quarter-deck" on the ramparts adjoining his quarters, still stands.

On the north coast lie celebrated Montego Bay, known as "the world's finest beach," Port Maria and Port Antonio connected by the loveliest road imaginable, and by rail with Kingston. The thermal mineral baths at Milk River possess radioactive properties which compare favorably with those of many European spas, and could be developed considerably.

Kingston is visited weekly throughout the winter by the Clarke liner North Star on seven-day cruises which leave Miami every Saturday evening. Calls are made at Port-au-Prince, Haiti and at Havana.

Her running mate is the New Northland, which is again operating on Miami-Nassau cruises this winter.

Seaboard Lowers Rate to South

The new low rate of 1½ cents per mile for travel in Seaboard Railway coaches will also be in effect on the line's new streamlined train, Silver Meteor, which will go in operation out of Washington February 2, it was announced by Edward Black, Seaboard's representative in Washington. This reduction in fares from 2 cents to 1½ cents for travel in coaches, representing the lowest daily scale in history, will be effective January 15.

The Silver Meteor is to operate on the fastest one-night-out schedule ever provided coach passengers between New York, Washington, Richmond, Savannah, Jacksonville, West Palm Beach, Miami, Tampa, St. Petersburg and other Florida cities. Leaving Washington at 7:40 p. m., the Silver Meteor will arrive in Miami the next afternoon. Arrival time in St. Petersburg out of New York is also early the following afternoon.

Winter Season Puerto Rico's Gayest

Carnival, Regatta, Fleet Maneuvers, Take Place This Month and Next

San Juan, Puerto Rico.

A carnival, a regatta and the greatest peace time fleet maneuvers since the World War—all occuring in January and February—have combined to make Puerto Rico's gayest midwinter season.

The committee in charge of the 101st celebration of the annual Ponce de Leon Carnival has announced dates for the principal events of the fiesta, and stressed the return to the Spanish tradition in the carnival, to be held from February 9-21. The announcement by the carnival committee that the accent would be on medieval Spain rather than a modern motif, like last year, sent scores of pretty senoritas digging into ancestral trunks for Spanish mantillas, high shell combs and shawls.

Balls and Pageants

February 11 has been set as the night for the Coronation Ball at which Senorita Myrtelina Besosa, the 1939 queen of carnival, is to be crowned, in a setting of tropical splendor near the ancient Escambron Fortress. The Royal Masquerade Ball, another event in honor of the new queen, will be held February 12 at the Hotel Condado.

On February 15 a pageant depicting life in this ancient possession of Uncle Sam's, from the 16th century days when Puerto Rico was a romantic Spanish colony frequented by pirates and adventurers, to the present day under American rule, is to be presented on the parade grounds of the old Spanish fortress, El Morro. A part of the pageant is to be devoted to a re-enactment of the Dutch attack on El Morro which occured in 1625. Soldiers of the 65th U. S. Infantry, stationed at El Morro, will participate in the "attack" wearing medieval Dutch and Spanish uniforms.

In addition to the usual carnival events which include masquerades, parades of floats, fiestas and street fairs, innovations this year will be a Spanish Shawl Ball on February 16 at the Hotel Condado, at which ladies will appear in colorful Spanish shawls, and a Spanish Mantilla Ball on February 20 at the Escambron Beach Club.

The carnival will close on February 21 with the annual Dance of the Queens, in honor of the 76 pretty girls chosen to "rule" over Puerto Rican towns and cities. It is planned to hold this dance at the beautiful Casa de Espana (Spanish Club) in San Juan.

Winter Maneuvers

Scores of parties and dances are to be held throughout January and February to entertain army and navy officers and their wives who will come to Puerto Rico for the annual joint winter maneuvers. For the first time the Atlantic and Pacific fleets will meet in the South Atlantic and Caribbean Sea for two months of war drills. More than 1,000 airplanes and 400 ships, including battleships, submarines and destroyers, will be based in Puerto Rican waters for the winter.

High spot of Puerto Rico's yachting season will occur on February 11 and 12 when an International Comet Class race will be held in San Juan bay with boats from the United States, Cuba, Santo Domingo and Canada competing. This sport is becoming increasingly popular in Puerto Rico where the all year around summery climate and the constancy of the Trade Winds make for ideal boating. Commodore Luis Santaella, of the Club Nautico, is already playing host to scores of yacht owners here for the winter.

Tunnels and Dungeons

Secret tunnels, closed since the Spanish were driven from the 16th century forts which surround San Juan by the American troops during the war with Spain, have been reopened for tourists. Part of a $573,000 WPA grant has been used for renovating tunnels and dungeons which once formed an impenetrable defense for the Spaniards against pirates and other enemies.

Nightly dances and floor shows at the Escambron Beach Club, the Hotel Condado, the Union Club and other resort spots assure visitors to "The Enchanted Isle" plenty of amusement.

Puerto Rico's Institute of Tourism has arranged special trips for tourists who wish to visit sugar, vanilla, coffee and tobacco plantations.

Big-game fishing is to be had at Mona Island and mountain climbing and surf bathing may be had within half-an-hour of each other.

Palm trees and sentry boxes border the ancient city of San Juan, Puerto Rico. This view was photographed from the 400-year-old San Cristobal fortress. To repel the attacks of English and Dutch invaders, the early Spanish conquistardores of Puerto Rico built massive walls around San Juan and projected stone sentry boxes over the roaring ocean waters.

Foreign Pleasure Hunters Are Invading Palm Beach

Seek to Avoid Unpleasant Conditions Abroad; Gay Season Opening At Famous Florida Resort City

Palm Beach, Fla.

With the recent arrival of the vanguard of cosmopolites from three continents, Palm Beach swings into its gayest winter season. Sun-bathing, swimming, golfing and sailfishing fill the day for those inclined to sports and early rising. The indolent and the "take-a-chance" gamester, too, are served with cocktail parties, tea-hour dances and evening rounds of night spots.

The regular Palm Beachites find their groups augmented this year by hordes of foreign pleasure-hunters, seeking to avoid the strife of war-torn shores. First to prepare to meet this invasion was George MacDonald, who recently acquired control of the Henry L. Doherty Florida resort properties, which include, in Palm Beach, Whitehall, the Palm Beach Biltmore, the Sun and Surf Club and the Palm Beach Country Club.

Whitehall, showplace of all Florida and social center of past seasons, is once again the vortex where international society converges. Formerly the home of Henry M. Flagler, Florida pioneer, who turned a mass of swamplands into a beautiful tropical playground, Whitehall always has been an important factor in the exclusive social pattern of Palm Beach.

Cunard Leads In Fares for 1938

For the seventeenth consecutive year, the Cunard White Star Line and its associated company, the Donaldson Atlantic Line, led all the Transatlantic Lines in passenger carrying with a total for 1938 of 176,959 passengers, according to an announcement today by Harold P. Borer, general passenger manager of the line. Its carryings exceeded those of its nearest competitor by 43,778 passengers.

Figures quoted included 17,886 passengers carried on its various cruises among which were a voyage around the world, another to the Land of the Midnight Sun and more than a score of cruises to the West Indies, the Saguenay, Bermuda and Nassau.

Havana Easiest and Safest Spot in World for Tourists

By Marny Nichols.

Unless what you mean is "Go away closer," don't wave away taxi drivers in Cuba. The wave means step right up and get it. If you don't need one of the friendly cab drivers, here's the way to say "No." It is a matter of extending the index finger and passing it back and forth before the face. The gesture, accompanied by a firm statement, "Perdone!" means "No soap."

And now that we have disposed of all the taxi drivers, and want to see Havana, let's try the wave-away gesture and see if we can get a car. Taxi service is reasonable in Havana, most of the fine buildings and parks near the famed Prado being only 20 cents away from the docks by well-regulated taxi service. In fact, the gay city of Havana, tourist capital of the Caribbean, is the easiest spot in the world for visitors to see, enjoy and shop without being "taken," as we Americanos describe it.

Where Am I?

Fixed prices for car hire and reliable information for tourists on where to shop, stop, wine, dine and just barge around are easily available through the Cuban National Tourist Commission—in fact, at the risk of being slapped on the wrist by the "Man's-Best-Friend-Is-His-Mother-Association," I would say that when in Cuba man's best friend is the commission. The commission's suave tourist police will direct you to anything from a taxi to a lace panty with complete equanimity. They are stout fellows with a fine command of English.

One of these knights, if the waving gesture fails, summons a taxi, and we are off to the national capitol, pride of every Cuban soul. The great building is constructed along the general lines of our capitol building but is larger, newer and more expensive. It is completely magnificent. Perhaps because the $18,000,000 structure is so enormous, it maintains with dignity the massively beautiful furnishings, tapestries, great marble ornaments and even—honest!—a 70-carat diamond embedded in the floor of the reception hall.

Out of the capitol, the tourist must walk the length of Prado boulevard, yellow with sunlight, maybe pausing in his sightseeing for a Cuban daiquiri at a Parisian-looking sidewalk cafe. These daiquiris speak with a great deal of authority and more than one tourist has left Havana feeling like the tag end of a misspent life.

Old fortresses and churches, magnificent public buildings and lovely scenery—Havana has an embarrassment of riches. And the worst of it is, unless you have come prepared to spend some time, you won't see all of it, for Havana is primarily a place to do, not see. Famed the world around for her carefree gayety, the Cuban capital offers sports and amusements of every description. Her beautiful racetrack is one of her chief attractions for the sports minded, as well as her fast games of jai-alai and polo. La Playa Beach, in the smart suburb of Marianao, is a swell place for a swim. Its waters are Gulf Stream temperature and the beach is white and well-kept. Golf addicts always have fun at the Havana Country Club.

Swing It, Sister

Uh-huh, I know what you're waiting for. Never a tourist went to Cuba without saving up sleep for days in preparation for a night life which has become as famous as that of Paris. Which brings us to the national casino.

The casino, "American Monte Carlo," is a great white marble sight in beautiful surroundings. Evening dress is not obligatory, but the magnificence of the place calls for it and most people to dress. With great gambling rooms, where roulette is the most popular games, and a lavish ballroom complete with floor show, the casino is one of Havana's great showplaces, as well as one of her amusements. The time to go is between midnight and 3. The gambling is most admirably regulated and said to be completely honest. The way Cuba looks after us tourists!

Havana's night clubs are legion, and they slide all the way up and down the scale. Sans Souci, 14 miles out of town built about a beautiful patio, is the largest. It is ritzy and refined. For the rhumba in its franker forms, a visit to the Rhumba Palace is indicated.

The Rhumba Club, formerly the Montmartre, is the second largest night club in Havana, located in back of the Nacional Hotel. Joy here is more unconfined than at Sans Souci. Eden Concert, in the center of town, is crowded, popular and riotous.

Jiggs, a cabaret near the wharves, is the favorite spot for a night cap and a bit of a leer at some too native dancing on the way back to the ship.

And don't call me early, Mother dear, because I'm not the queen of the May!

The Bridge Deck

By Florence Osborn.

A mild fiasco was cleverly averted by Aaron J. Frank, Cleveland expert, on today's hand. As defender, he prevented his partner from making a possible fatal shift by giving a positive discard in a suit in which he had no winners. But though he lied about his ability to take a trick in the suit, he protected his two vulnerable kings from being led through and held the part score diamond contract to four odd, winning as fine score on the board as most other declarers made five.

In the play Frank's partner led the club king and Frank immediately threw the ten, asking his partner to continue the suit though he could win no tricks in it, to prevent a shift to hearts or diamonds which would kill a king, or to spades as he was uncertain about the location of the other spade honors.

South dutifully obeyed, playing the club ace which was ruffed by East, but the contract was held to four odd, as declarer had to give up a heart, a diamond, and a club.

A spade shift would have been safe, but Frank was wise in taking no chances.

Bridge

By Marian H. Barre

We are not superstitious—but two wins, and second, third and fourth place in the Harrisburg team event seems augury for future successes in 1939. There may be nothing in this Harrisburg tradition that the Central Pennsylvania championship serve as a barometer, but it is just as well to be on the safe side.

The tournament was played at the Penn Harris Hotel in the Pennsylvania capital over the past week-end. It was the first tournament of the new year, which explains the superstition. The Washington wins were made on the first day, Friday, January 6. Mrs. Wilfred de St. Aubin was leading lady. Paired with Mrs. Daisy Hubbard Mott, of Washington and New York, Mrs. St. Aubin captured the women's trophy in the afternoon and the mixed pair championship in the evening, playing with Mr. St. Aubin. (Dual wins are becoming habit among District players.)

The women's game was another fractional victory, made on 33/100 of a match point. In the mixed event the Washington pair had an 8-point lead over Charles H. Goren, a national champion, and Mrs. R. C. Young, second ranking woman player in the United States. The St. Aubins are comparative newcomers in the Washington Bridge League, coming to this city from Indianapolis about two years ago. Their first major win was made last fall when they captured the District of Columbia amateur championship.

A local foursome composed of Al Roth, Joe Brotman, Louis Newman and John Mothershed finished as runners-up to the Philadelphia team captained by Charles Solomon in the Harrisburg team match. Mr. and Mrs. James H. Lemon, Leroy Thurtell and L. R. Watson, jr., only two boards under the winners, made third place. And still another local line-up of Mrs. Charles Kavanaugh, Lewis Tubbs, Mrs. Mott and Edgar Perkins finished fourth.

About 20 Capital fans took part in the tournament, and every Washingtonian competing in the open pair event was a finalist. This game was won by Ellenbogan and Mrs. M. Mitchell, of Philadelphia.

Delaware's State championships begin this Friday, January 20. The program covers three day's play and includes women's pairs and mixed pairs, both one-session events on the opening day; a two-session open pair contest played Saturday with a qualifying session in the afternoon; and a match for teams-of-four on Sunday.

The Delaware trophies are now held by Washingtonians, the Lemons holding both. It was the first dual win made in 1938. Mr. and Mrs. Lemon won the open pair championship on one day, and on the next teamed with E. B. Conolly and Al Roth, they annexed the team championship. All four players expect to defend their titles.

Owing to a change of plans the Delaware dates were decided upon too late for inclusion in the A. C. B. L. list of coming master point events. The above dates are announced under the authority of Miss Frances Jacoby. The tournament will be held in Wilmington at the Hotel Darling.

No tournaments are scheduled for the week ending on January 28, unless one wants to travel to Cortland, N. Y., but the following week holds a big date, the contract championships of the State of Maryland, beginning on Febraury 3, at the Hotel Belvedere in Baltimore.

The National Press Club's duplicate series was resumed last Monday evening after a recess through the holidays.

Mrs. C. B. Pennebaker led all the women players in the session completed before Christmas. Second on the list was Miss Edna Merton, with Mrs. Oliver Hovem ranking third. On the men's list Col. C. E. Stewart was top, with Harold Brayman, retiring president of the Press Club, runner-up, and John D. Mothershed third.

Still another duplicate game started up in Washington last evening. It is to be a weekly event, held every Saturday evening at Wardman Park Hotel under the same management that formerly ran the Hotel Carlton Duplicate Club.

The Washington Bridge League's first game in 1939, played Wednesday, January 4, at the Hotel Shoreham, had an attendance of 31 tables. It was played as a three-section pair contest with the final round of the Clifford Challenge match also in play.

A steadily increasing membership is a cause of gratification to the league, but outweighing the consideration of mere numbers is the fine spirit of sportsmanship shown in the games. The caliber of play has improved to a really remarkable degree and this improvement is spread over an ever-enlarging group. Washington bridge is no longer a case of a few stars, but of "a good stock company."

The Department of the Treasury Recreational Association is sponsoring a duplicate game to be held every Tuesday evening in a Mitchell pair movement at 2228 Decatur place northwest, under the direction of William Cheeks. All members of the Treasury, and its associate department, are eligible to take part in the game.

The U. S. Government personnel is becoming increasingly bridge-minded. Where before the Federal Bridge League, open to all National and District Government employes, served the need, now several Departments run separate games for their own members. And the Federal League continues to grow in size and importance. It has a record team enrollment this year.

Charles H. Goren, recently made a Life Master of the ACBL and a repeat national champion, addressed a distinguished audience at the Sulgrave Club. His series of four bridge lectures on Thursday mornings in January is sponsored by Mrs. James Carroll Fraser.

Goren's first lecture covered responses to opening bids of one in a suit, and rebids by the opener. It was filled with meat and couched in simple, definite language. He is one of the few experts who doesn't dodge difficult situations. Even "what to bid when there is no good bid in the hand" doesn't phase him. Among some of the Goren adages are: "It is better to tell partner a lie about the strength of your suit than about the strength of your hand," "never strain a point to make 2 no-trump your second bid. Rather shade some other bid." "Sometimes when no other satisfactory response is available you may raise your partner with a little less than normal trump support," and "never respond with 1 no-trump on a weak hand when you can possibly respond with one of a suit."

The above quotes all deal with hair-splitting bridge decisions that are seldom allowed to come up in books of other experts.

In a private interview after his lecture, Mr. Goren specifically denied that he ever advocated a defense overall on a three-card suit. This bid has been credited to him in a nationally syndicated bridge column. Followers of Goren's theories refused to believe he would sponsor such an overcall since he considers even a three-card minor suit opening a very dangerous bid and as a "convenience devised for mediocre hands" to be "bid very cautiously."

Camera Angles

By Arthur Ellis

Those who attended the first Virginia news photography conference at Washington and Lee University which adjourned Saturday night, January 7, following Anton Baumann's lecture and demonstration in Washington chapel, came away with a deeper understanding of the problems facing the news photographer today, some solutions of these problems and the firm conviction that manufacturers of their cameras and the accessories were making every effort to solve the mechanical problems of news photography today.

The untiring efforts of O. W. Riegel, the pipe-smoking scholarly director of the Lee Journalism Foundation at the University, might be credited with the success of the first news photography conference held in this section of the country. Representatives of the principal newspapers in a half dozen Southern States and the District of Columbia, together with demonstrators and camera authorities of leading manufacturing concerns, gathered at Lexington, Va., for the three-day session. Interesting lectures by lensmen and practical demonstrations in darkrooms constructed for the session were attended by more than 200 persons, including magazine and newspaper executives and journalism students.

First prize in the news photography contest held in conjunction with the conference went to Howard Jones, formerly staff photographer with a Knoxville, Tenn., daily. The picture was given wide circulation, and events surrounding the making of the photographs were front-paged. Jones escaped with his life making the picture. Steel nerves and a cool head resulted in the cameraman picturing a political figure, both hands grasping a gun, firing into the lens. Interesting to note that the judge freed the assailant at the trial that followed the episode. Mr. Jones is now listed among the unemployed.

Dressed in a dark red evening gown, dark-haired, slim and attractive Margaret Bourke-White faced an overflow audience from the rostrum of staid old Lee Chapel and found herself the target of cameras with flashbulbs flaring from the balcony that encircled the interior of the old chapel.

Urging news photographers to use their lenses to defend democracy, the noted woman member of Life's staff related her experiences in Czechozlovakia and Loyalist Spain. Her half-year stay in Europe has impressed her with the importance of being able to take pictures whenever we want to and publish them as we wish. She is convinced that "terrible things" could not happen in Europe if this were true there.

She told the conference that she used a Linhof and both the Leica and the Contax and "Lots of flash bulbs."

We would like to pass on a story which she tells. Some two years ago she received an assignment from a New York paper to photograph the President at his desk in the White House. The night before the assignment she dreamt that she was in the President's office. She was very nervous and continually knocked over her tripod as she set up her lights. To make matters worse she had to work in what seemed to be mountains of burnt out flash bulbs. Finally the President exasperated at her nervousness ordered her taken away. She then found herself outside escorted by two secret service men. Escaping she made her way back and found herself on the roof of the White House. Climbing down, she observed the President at his desk. Just as she was about to enter his office again, she awoke. That afternoon she carried out her assignment without a hitch. As she left she set up to make a picture of the White House and as she tried to put in her holder, just then her focusing back crashed to the sidewalk, shattering into a hundred pieces.

Miss Bourke-White waited two years for the opportunity of telling her story to President Roosevelt. Her patience was finally rewarded during her recent stay at Warm Springs on an assignment for Life Magazine. Needless to say the President got a big kick listening to the photographer relating her nerve wracking experience.

Color film of this Indian head, bound between glass plates, was missed following Anton Baumann's demonstration and lecture before the Leica Club at their recent meeting. H. H. Harriss, president of the club, is anxious to locate the slide in order that it might be returned to Mr. Baumann

Interesting to us was the audience reaction to this personality. She faced a large, critical gathering of members of her own profession, engraving authorities, camera authorities, editors and demonstrators. Flashing a warm smile, a most pleasing personality and speaking in a small voice, her words seeming to tumble out in a breathless way, she had the conference wrapped up and in the palm of her hand soon after she was introduced. Afterwards, we asked her how she liked being the flash bulb target.

"I certainly would much rather be on the other end of the lens," she said, "every time a bulb goes off I think about the angle, the distance and how I looked from that angle above or the one below."

A hair raising thriller was supplied by William C. Eckenberg, New York Times staff photographer, one of the conference lecturers. Stressing the necessity of coolness under fire he related incidents and experiences of news cameramen working under great strain. To drive home his point, he brought the attendance to the edge of their seats by playing a record. The recording was made at the scene of the Hindenburg crash by a Chicago radio station. The station had dispatched an announcer and engineer to Lakehurst to record the landing of the big ship for studio purposes. The resultant record in which the announcer describes the explosion as it occurs before his very eyes is an amazing document. The announcer's voice traveling the scale of human emotion pictured the scene as it presented itself to the cameramen assembled on the field that evening. The world press carried sensational examples of news photography at its best, a tribute to the coolness and courage of the men on the story.

The conference learned that today, more than ever before, manufacturers are bending every effort to perfect the ideal news camera.

Joe Sprague, well known in New York for his improvements in the operations of the long lens cameras and "Big Berthas" before joining the Folmer Graflex Corporation, discussed camera problems and press cameras and equipment. One of the designers of the new 2¼ x 3¼ Speed Graphic, he showed negatives made at a speed of 1-875 second, the flash bulb synchronized with focal plane shutter. Midget racing cars, bicycles racing across the lens and acrobatic dancers were well exposed at this speed. We found that the 2A Wabash bulb is recommended for this speed work. He contributed valuable information and supplied answers to individual problems.

The final day of the conference was marked by a talk by Daniel Longwell, associate editor of Life Magazine, whose remarks were made more effective by examples he presented during his discourse on layouts and the general value of pictures when used in continuity form. He illustrated how a single photo might take the place of three or four prints when used in this manner—should the man behind the camera carefully study his story before exposing his film.

George Skadding, Associated Press photographer, whose assignment requires him to travel with the President on his trips away from Washington, related the problems of his particular job. Syndicate photographers who accompany the White House entourage are constantly alert and always endeavoring to localize their shots so that the backgrounds clearly depict where the photo was made so that editors will not toss aside the print as "just another picture of the President."

Sammy Mendelsohn, pioneer with the synchronized flash gun adapted for bulbs, exhibited his latest models which included a new type front shutter synchronizer that is not as severe on the release trigger. He also gave the audience an early view of his recently designed gun for use with the focal plant shutter on the 4 by 5 Speed Graphics.

Has anyone seen a color slide, an Indian head, bound between 35x150mm glass slide plates bound with red cellulose tape? The slide is the property of Anton Baumann and was used during his demonstration and lecture at the last meeting of the Leica Club at the Lee House.

He was using it in a demonstration as one of three slides. The slide may have been found by someone in the audience, accidentally placed in someone's pocket or unintentionally carried away.

H. H. Harriss, president of the Leica Club, requests club members and others attending the meeting to endeavor to locate the missing negative. If found please send to, or notify E. Leitz, Inc., Hibbs Building, 723 15th street, District 5481; H. H. Harriss, 1360 Hamilton street northwest, Georgia 1763, or you may mail it to this writer, Photographic Department, The Post.

At the Chess Table

By Willard Mutchler

Ernest M. Knapp, leader in the current championship fray at the Capital City Chess Club, was scheduled to meet Kenneth Stubbs last night in their postponed contest. Since Knapp leads his nearest competitor, D. H. Mugridge, by but a half a point, the outcome is quite important. If Knapp is victorious he will clinch the title. A draw will necessitate a short playoff match, while a loss will give Mugridge first honors.

With the coming of the new year interest invariably points toward that major annual chess event, the District Championship tournament. The District of Columbia Chess Championship Committee consists of I. S. Turover, honorary chairman; W. K. Wimsatt, chairman; C. W. Stark and D. H. Mugridge, president and chess director, respectively, of the Capital City Club; E. W. Kunkle and M. L. Kessler, president and chess director, respectively, of the Paul Morphy Club; H. W. Horn and F. W. F. Gleason, of the Chess Divan, and W. H. Mutchler and J. B. Beadle, selected by vote of the contestants in previous tourneys. Any organized group within the Metropolitan Area may select two delegates for membership on the committee, subject to its approval.

It is the duty of the chairman to arrange a meeting of the committee as soon after January 1 as practical, and Mr. Wimsatt may be depended upon to start proceedings in the immediate future. This will be the tenth annual contest for the I. S. Turover silver trophy, which is to be permanently awarded to the player winning the title three consecutive times. Vladimir Sournin, who last year shattered all precedent by trouncing the entire field without yielding so much as a draw, is the only player whose name appears on the trophy three times. However, Sournin's victory still leaves him with two more titles to gain before the trophy becomes his own. Previous titleholders, since the Turover cup has become the stake, are as follows:

1930, F. B. Walker; 1931, F. B. Walker; 1932, V. Sournin; 1933, V. Sournin; 1934, D. H. Mugridge; 1935, M. C. Stark; 1936, D. H. Mugridge; 1937, L. N. Ponce, and 1938, V. Sournin.

Those who vied for Sournin's crown last year included J. E. DuBois, V. L. Eaton, H. A. Rousseau, E. M. Knapp, L. N. Ponce, P. D. Smith, Robert Feeney, A. Sturges and Joseph Scribante. The players finished in the order named, with the only ties being that for second place between DuBois, Eaton and Rousseau, all of whom finished with a 6 to 3 score, and that for third between Knapp and Ponce, each of whom scored 4½ points. DuBois has left the city, while Ponce's tenure here is of dubious length, so both may be missing from this year's tourney. Old familiars, M. C. Stark and D. H. Mugridge, will probably take part, however, and the usual influx of new talent may be expected.

Hastings Festival

The annual Christmas tournament at Hastings, England, this year failed to draw its usual quota of outstanding master players. Still the field was a strong one and the name of a newcomer was added to the ranks of international supremacy. L. Szabo, of Budapest, won his first major triumph, topping former world champion, Dr. M. Euwe, a full point in the bargain. The standings:

Player.	W.	L.	Player.	W.	L.

Federal Diary

By Scott Hart.

A girl will walk from the platform in the Departmental Auditorium tomorrow night carrying a silver loving cup and the title of "Miss Civil Service," the ideal feminine employe in the Federal Government here.

S. H. ORDWAY

She is due the acclaim from the thousands of persons who will be in the auditorium celebrating National Civil Service Week and the fifty-sixth anniversary of the United States civil service system. She will leave the platform not alone with the cup but with an honor that was difficult to get.

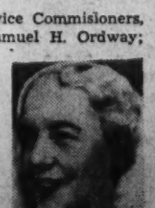
This is said, because we know how hard put were the judges who were given the task of finding the ideal worker here. The list of nominees poured into The Post for more than a month, and the nominees were representative of the best the service here has to offer. The selection has been a trying one to make. There was much to be said for each candidate.

So if you are in the auditorium tomorrow night and watch the ceremonies of award, this may be borne in mind: The winner was selected because she seemed, after a most careful consideration, to combine all the qualities of efficiency, adaptability and general merit that go to make for an ideal employe . . . she had no "pull" whatever in getting the award and title; the simple facts of her name and where she works went to the judges. From this bare score, the judges undertook investigations, and the merits and qualifications of each candidate were seriously viewed.

MITCHELL

The judges were chosen with every possible care. They were James C. O'Brien, an assistant to the chief examiner of the Civil Service Commission; Ira Y. Bain, chief personnel officer of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and Representative Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia, a member of the House Civil Service Committee. They were allowed 15 days in which to make the selection. The judges will be on the platform when the award is made.

Also on the program will be the three Civil Service Commisioners, Harry B. Mitchell, Lucille Foster McMillin and Samuel H. Ordway; Representative Robert Ramspeck, of Georgia; Senator David I Walsh, of Massachusetts, and John T. Doyle, who for many years was a secretary to the commission. All of these authorities on the civil service will speak briefly. The meeting is sponsored by the American Federation of Government Employees, which has arranged to have the whole proceedings broadcast. The United States Marine Band Orchestra will furnish the music.



McMILLIN

The auditorium has a seating capacity of several thousand and the general public is invited to witness the award of The Post cup and to hear what the several authorities have to say concerning the past and future of the Federal merit system. The subject will be in the forefront of Congress this session, and friends of the civil service system look to 1939 as a banner year for its growth.

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

Stamp collectors should never be concerned for fear of shortage in postage stamps issued annually by the United States. Except for a few legitimate errors stamp production is so large none need worry about quantity, and quality also is worthy of notice.

W. M. STUART

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing produced a grand total of 295,447,582 sheets or 27,435,948,050 postage stamps of all denominations, not including those for the Philippines and Canal Zone. Of ordinary postage stamps, 1922 series, there were 21,155,699 sheets of 2-cent or a total of 2,115,569,900 stamps and 16,257,550 sheets of 1-cent or 1,625,755,000 stamps. Therefore, the number of canceled stamps of low denominations should be sufficient to supply all collectors for a long time. In addition, there were printed millions of other stamps of these two denominations in coils, books and precanceled. There were issued 23,411 sheets of $1.00 denomination or 2,341,047 stamps, 1,871 sheets of $2.00 value or 187,075 stamps and 1,474 sheets of $5.00 value or 147,435 stamps.

In the series of 1932 there were printed 42,924,220 sheets or 4,292,422,000 3-cent stamps, besides millions of others of this denomination in coils, books and precanceled. There were also millions of commemorative stamps issued during the fiscal year 1938. Susan B. Anthony stamps numbered 26,286,400 and the production in prior years was even greater. Army and Navy stamps were produced in great quantities. Thus it will be seen that millions upon millions of stamps are issued annually sufficient to supply all needs. Unused stamps may be obtained by anyone, but a canceled stamp tells the true story.

The schedule and program for the Philatelic Truck now in Washington is being arranged by officials of the Third Assistant Postmaster General's office. In all likelihood the truck will be sent on its way by Postmaster General James A. Farley in a suitable get-a-way. Thousands of requests for the truck have already been received from postoffices, schools, universities, business houses and philatelic societies. The truck will be well equipped with postal material, stamps, frames of past issues, presses, practically everything that pertains to stamps or is of interest to the collector.

The Post Office Department will have suitable exhibits at the fairs in San Francisco and New York.

On Friday, first-day cancelations will be in order for the new coils of the regular issue in sidewise perforated variety at the Washington Postoffice. Endwise perforated coils and books of the new stamps will be canceled first-day of January 27.

Air-mail collectors will be interested to know that the pickup routes will start about May 14, 1939. It is also announced that the balance of route AM-40 will probably start during this month, from Tallahassee to Memphis. The balance of route AM-42 will probably start about February 1, 1939, Houston to Brownsville. Bids will be opened on the autogiro route on Tuesday.

Panama has announced that in commemoration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the Panama Canal a series of 16 postage and 6 airmail stamps will be issued, probably during the summer months. The values, colors, quantities and designs have been announced as follows: Postage set-1c, yellow green, 1,000,000 Balbo before; 2c, carmine rose, 500,000, Balboa, after; 3c, blue violet, 3,000,000, Gaillard Cut, after; 6c, red, 200,000, Bas Obispo, before; 7c black, 200,000 Bas Obispo, after; 8c, sage, 200,000, Gatun Locks, before; 10c, blue, 200,000 Gatun Locks, after; 11c, deep green, 200,000, Canal Channel, before;; 12c, magenta, 200,000, Canal Channel, after; 14c, deep violet, Gamboa, before; 15c, olive brown, 300,000, Gamboa, after; 18c, lake, 200,000, Pedro Miguel Locks, before; 20c, brown, 200,000 Pedro Miguel Locks, after; 25c, red orange, 100,000, Gatun Spillway, before; 50c violet brown, 100,000, Gatun Spillway, after. A. A. Clipper, Manazanillo Island; 30c, carmine rose, 300,000, P. A. A. Clipper over Gaillard Cut; $1, green, 100,000, P. A. A. Clipper and palm trees.

Salvador will issue a set of three stamps, air mails, in honor of the San Francisco fair. The denominations will be 15c, 30c and 40c. The designs will depict the Golden Gate Bridge, the coat of arms of Salvador and the coat of arms of California.

Belgium issued special postage stamps of 35 centimes, 1 franc, 50c and 1 franc, 75c, for the "Exposition Internationale de l'Eau-Liege—1939" (the International Water Exposition at Liege). The stamps showed views of the exposition and were placed on sale October 31, 1938, and will remain on sale in all postoffices of the Kingdom until September 30, 1939. They will take the place of the ordinary postage stamps of the same value and will be valid until September 30, 1940.

Announcement of the new special postage stamp in commemoration of the Golden Gate International Exposition, which opens in San Francisco on February 18, 1939, has been made by the Postoffice Department. The new stamp, 3-cent denomination, will be first placed on sale at the San Francisco postoffice on the above date and will be available at other postoffices as soon after that date as distribution will permit.

The new stamp will be printed by rotary press, purple in color, arranged vertically 84/100 by 1-44/100 inches in dimensions, and issued in sheets of 50.

The chief design will be a reproduction of the "Tower of the Sun," one of the features of the exposition on Treasure Island in San Francisco Bay. At the bottom of the central design will be a large numeral "3" in white modern Gothic. Superimposed on the numeral will be the word "Cents" in dark-face Roman, with the dates "19" and "39" in white within small squares at the left and right, respectively. At the top and sides of the stamp in dark Gothic lettering will be the words "United States Postage" at the left, and "Golden Gate" at the top, and "International Exposition" at the right.

First day covers, not to exceed ten for any one person, will be serviced by the postmaster at San Francisco. The stamps will be placed on sale at the Philatelic Agency on February 20, 1939.

Another notable exhibition of rare stamps was the feature of the meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., Tuesday evening at the Thomson Community Center, when portions of the collection of Harry E. Weinberg, of Baltimore, Md., were displayed.

Several frames of interesting material, which included the semi-official carrier stamps of Baltimore, were shown. These stamps were in three types, postoffice dispatch, carriers dispatch and Government dispatch. Each stamp and cover was in superb condition and many of those present had never viewed such an array of these scarce stamps. Also were shown stampless covers franked by the postmaster of Baltimore in the 1850's. There were also all the types and colors and 1-cent value of the Baltimore carrier stamp of 1851, blue, red and black, with cancelations of 1856 and 1857. The collection of stamps showing industry, of many nations, was also most interesting. These included a score of pages showing stamps representing primitive stages, agriculture, transportation, music, sports and general information. A display of a history of the World War in stamps and the stamps of King Edward VII were shown.

Among the guests present was Col. Charles S. Hamilton, a former member who has returned to reside in Washington after several years absence. He was unanimously re-elected a member. President C. Hercus Just introduced Svend Yory, who gave an interesting talk on the exhibition at the National Museum in March and asked that material be selected now.

At the meeting on Tuesday the regular auction sale will be held.

The Capital Precancel Club met at the Thomson Community Center Monday evening. Rolston Lyon presided. Several members will attend the "1939 Convention Preview" today at the Lord Baltimore Hotel, Baltimore, sponsored by the Baltimore Precancel Club, Branch 17.

The Washington Air Mail Society will meet tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock at Hotel Lafayette.

There will be a meeting of the Washington Junior Federation of Stamp Collectors at 6:45 o'clock on Wednesday evening at the Hotel Carlton, prior to the meeting of the Washington Philatelic Society. Miss Louise Winfield, of the Roosevelt Stamp Club, will lead in a debate on "Resolved that miniature sheets are beneficial to philately." A prize will be awarded for the best two-minute talk on "My Favorite Stamp."

Russell J. Broderick, president of the Society of Philatelic Americans, under date of December 31, 1938, has designated Stephen G. Rich, of Verona, N. J., secretary pro tem of the society, pending the appointment of a successor to the secretary resigned.

J. Edward Vining, of St. Louis, Mo., member year book committee of the S. P. A., has announced that forms close this week. The new year book will contain by-laws, convention news, records of the 1938 Chicago convention, list of members and other information of interest.

Members of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., will visit the Frederick Stamp and Coin Club at Frederick, Md., tomorrow night.

The recent auction sale at the Collectors Club, New York City, of the superb collection offered by Philip H. Ward, jr., of Philadelphia, totaled $36,676 for the 456 lots. A notable item was a Baltimore 10-cent black-on-white cover used abroad which brought $3,750.

Postmaster General James A. Farley reports receipts for the December quarter of the fiscal year 1939, October, November and December, higher than for any previous quarter in the history of the postal service. The receipts amounted to $210,153,624.

The 1938 series of the Pro Juventute stamps of Switzerland seem to be more popular than any of the former charity stamps. The first of Pro Juventute stamps were issued in 1913 there being but a single value, 5 centimes plus 5 centimes, the design depicting Helvetia with the Matterhorn as a background; its color was green on granite paper. Since then 88 such stamps have been issued.

The 1938 series comprises four denominations. The 5c plus 5c shows a portrait of Salomon Gessner, eighteenth century poet and artist, born in Zurich, April 1, 1730, and died there March 2, 1788. The stamp is green in color. The 10c plus 5rp, purple and chamois, shows a girl from St. Gallen. The 20c plus 5rp, red and buff, pictures a girl from Uri and the 30c plus 10rp, blue and chamois, shows a girl from the Aargau. A background on each of the three high values suggests the canton of the respective portrait.

"AH! HERE HE COMES. BETTER SHARPEN UP THE MOLARS"

VISITING UNCLE SAM'S MODERN PRISON.

At the Federal penitentiary on McNeil Island, Wash., a new program for rehabilitation of the criminal has been in operation for a number of years with considerable success. Warden Edwin B. Swope, show above consulting with a prisoners' grievance committee, is credited with maintaining inmate morale and establishing a better education program for prisoners. At left, one of the brightly lighted "front porches" of the cell blocks at McNeil Island. The prisoner at right seen sewing has benefited under the professional training system which teaches men a craft or trade to help them on the right road after their release.

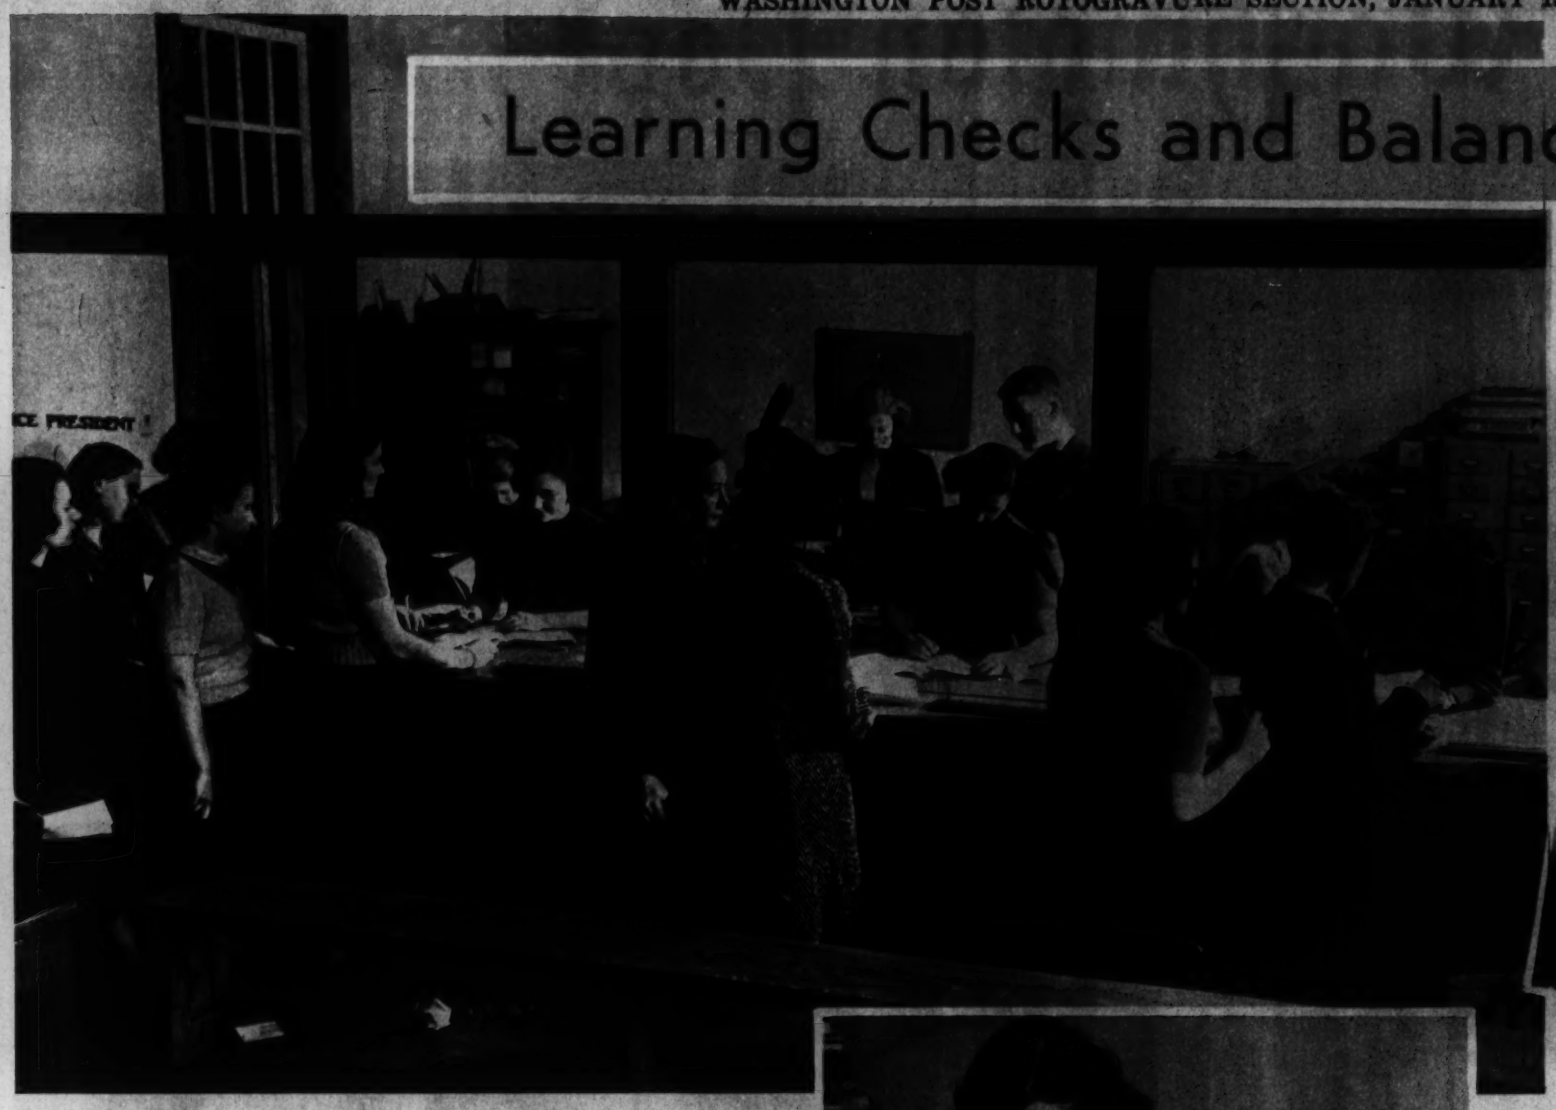
Learning Checks and Balances



Hundreds of Washington high school students learn both sides of the banking business —the inside and the outside—right in school. Depositors, through regular visits to the "receiving" windows of the school bank, learn the value of thrift; student bankers learn (by doing) the processes of handling funds, making investments. Above is a general view of activity during "banking hours" at Central High.

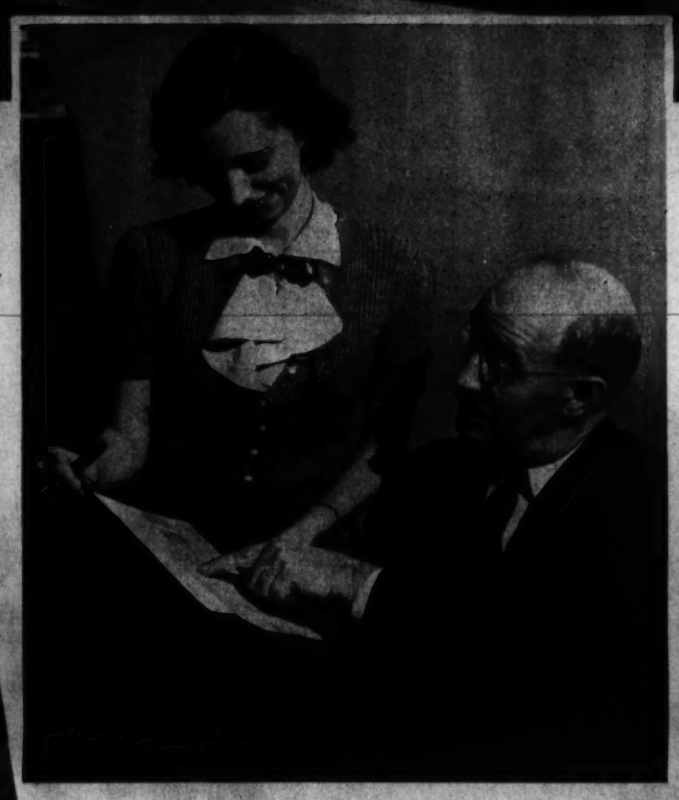
Mary Ruth Sink, above, is president of Central's bank, but the dignity of her office does not, as you see, raise her above a little study on the side. Nathan Segal, all wrapped up in depositors' ledger balances, hopes to keep a long list of figures free of all entanglement.



Many apply for bank jobs; the few showing most aptitude for the work are chosen. And Natalie Lipshultz, chosen head bookkeeper, shows in the picture at left that there is plenty of work involved in her position. Being a laboratory for training business the Central bank negotiates all kinds of bank transactions. When Miss Sink, president, runs into complications she goes to (as above) E. O. Harned, faculty adviser, for help.

Ten cents will open a student savings account in the Central High Bank. With that sum, maybe a greater one, Faye Lendenbaum, left above, has just become a student depositor, and Evelyn Libert, teller, explains the entry she has made in her schoolmate's bank book.

At the request of Dr. A. L. Howard, head of the department of business practice for all local high schools, the District of Columbia Bankers Association sends an auditor around annually to check all school bank books. Above picture shows William B. Mehler, jr., auditors' section, D. C. B. A., going over Central's books with Dorothy Metz, cashier.

To Darline Volk, bank clerk, right, all bank checks are alike. One with small figures is just as important as the one with half a dozen digits—if it has been tabulated wrong. Here she checks a pile of drafts against entries on a bank statement.

SPRING FASHIONS

From the smart winter resorts come hints of the next season's most popular modes. Sports clothes reflect the gay simplicity of both Northern and Southern playgrounds. Evening and afternoon gowns forsake the rich fabrics of winter while retaining their dignity and grace.

FOR THE SKI ENTHUSIAST.
Repeating the colors of winter snow and sky, this ski suit of deep blue and crisp white is both warm and comfortable. The trousers are of white wool, the jacket blue and the scarf white with blue stripes.

FOR A GALA EVENING.
Chanel has taken thousands of narrow black ribbons and gathered them on stiff black tulle to make this striking evening gown. A rosette of ribbons is worn in the hair and a tiny round muff of the same material completes the picture.

A JACKET WITH ZIP.
Black unicorns decorate the lapels of this zipper-closed jacket of black, gray and red stripes. The jacket, trimmed with black astrakan, tops a skirt of black. The suit is from Jean Fath, the hat from Erik.

DRAPERY DOES IT.
A dramatic afternoon gown of fuschia crepe results from the draped lines running from the right shoulder to the long sash tied in a bow at the waist. Two soft chiffon scarfs, one pink, the other blue, tie on a tiny black velvet hat (right).

YOUNG GIRL'S SPRING ENSEMBLE.
From the South comes this spring coat and dress of dusty pink. The fitted coat of soft wool is trimmed with pink wood buttons. Panels of tucks running from hem to neckline smarten the dress. An ensemble that will be popular right through the spring.

PINK FOR EVENING.
Rose and gray striped taffeta accents this basic-styled evening frock of pale pink moire, designed by Jeanne Hoire. The draped bodice and straps and unusual flounce and a striking note to the sweep gown.

A-SLEIGHING WE WILL GO!
A merry party sets out from a hotel in St. Moritz, Switzerland, for a ride over the Alpine snow. Sleds are a popular means of transportation at the famous winter resort, but a little horsepower helps a lot going up hill. In the background are the "Sisters" mountains.

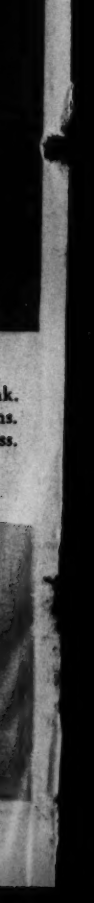
A LONG TRAIL.
Down over Alpine slopes sportsmen race, leaving deep furrows to create interesting shadows for the photographer. The scene is near Davos, Switzerland.

SCIENCE COMES TO FIDO'S AID.
Dogs are noted for excellent eyesight. But they be nearsighted, too. Providing the needed glasses has been a difficult task. Many opticians have tried, but have failed to build spectacles the dog would wear. Now Robert Muller, a Geneva specialist, seems to have something. Above, the bone test; below, the spectacle frame.

CANCER STUDY.
A new X-ray outfit, small enough to be installed in existing hospital buildings, but designed to operate at 1,000,000 volts, is seen being put together at the General Electric plant at Schenectady, N. Y. L. E. Dempster, left, and W. F. Westendorp, are the scientists who built the tube for cancer research.



FIGHTING FROST.
Quinter Bashore, Covina, Calif., inventor, is shown with one of his therapeutic lamps which he has used successfully to protect his lemon grove during frosty nights. Infra red rays keep the chlotophyl active in the leaves, which won't freeze as long as they're absorbing light.

Celebrates 80th Birthday Following the Hounds

A STORY OF THE CHASE.

Back to the fireside after clearing quite a few chicken coops and rail fences, Mr. Keith was interrupted by the photographer while telling his grandchildren about the run. From left, Peggy, Jimmy and Barry Hamilton, children of Mrs. James Hamilton. Jiggs, his favorite setter dog, rests comfortably at his master's feet.

HONORED BY HUNTSMEN

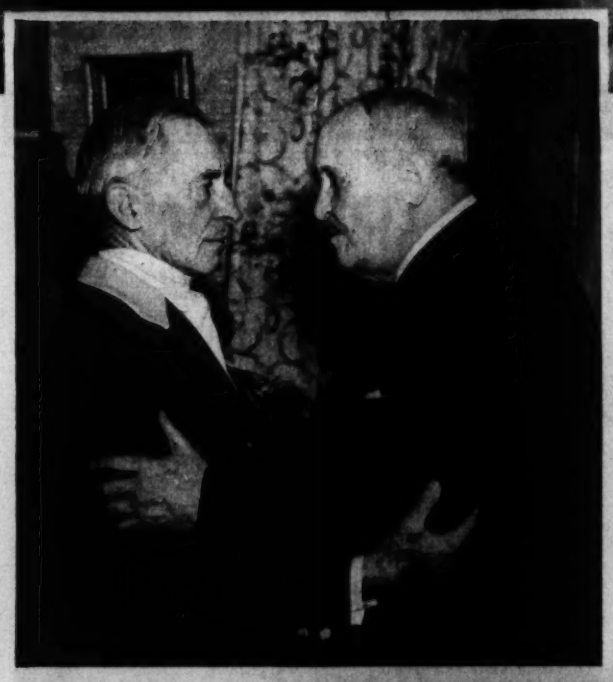
Last Monday a large crowd gathered at Dunnottar, near Warrenton, Va., to participate in the birthday party honoring Julian C. Keith (above), former M. F. H. of the Warrenton Hunt, who had reached the eightieth milestone. Veteran of the saddle, he donned a pink coat and joined the hunters in pursuit of the elusive fox.

PARTY GUESTS

were Mrs. Sarah Warren, at right, lighting a cigarette for Mrs. Crosby Miller. They were among the Warrenton residents who attended the party following the hunt. Visitors were on hand from all sections of the country to honor Mr. Keith.

FRIENDS OF MR. KEITH

Most every room at Dunnottar was crowded with guests. For many years Mr. Keith has served as senior judge at the many horse shows held in Virginia, Maryland and Washington. His keen horsemanship is well recognized in other States.



CONGRATULATIONS.

Former Gov. Westmoreland Davis, who now resides in Leesburg, Va., pictured as he greeted Mr. Keith.
